NEW YORK.

The Market.

With such hot weather as we are having, what kind of a market can there be? Even its dullness is restful. Everybody is loaded with gladioli and asters, the former selling from 50 cents to $2 per hundred, for America, and asters from half a cent (think of it!) up to 10 cents a bunch. A few good roses arrive and go quickly. The top seems to be $4 per hundred for Brides and Maids. Orchids and valley are scarce and high. The man who has valley every day in the year now has his innings and he deserves it. Sweet peas do not pay for picking. It is the same old story every August, with this year about the worst on record. If it isn't it makes us feel better to call it so. In two or three weeks the clouds will lift and we will forget dull care ever existed and go right on booming things as usual.

Various Notes.

The folks in the wholesale section are either going away for their annual vacations, or coming home. Young men and maidens, old men and children, all are having a whirl. Most of the boys go to the mountains. Some are at the shore resorts. To particularize would list the entire fraternity.

Mr. Bernhard, bookkeeper for the Clucas & Boddington Co., is just back from Europe after a happy visit with his parents there.

Wm. C. Duncan, manager of the Cut Flower Exchange, Coogan building, will be married on Thursday of this week.

It is hard to find any one not going to the convention, and most of them are going on the special at 10:55 a. m. Monday, via the Pennsylvania railroad. The officials guarantee a special train for 100 and over that number is now a certainty. Every day adds to the acceptances and the committee asks that those who have not sent their names and intend to join the throng telegraph Secretary Young not later than Saturday afternoon of their decision so that the caterer general, Mr. Nugent, may provide amply for all.

Most of the wholesale stores have the danger signal up these days and, while paint is everywhere, all the stores are looking neat and prim. The gold trimmings will come a little later. Everybody seems to be counting on a big year and preparing for it. Some are already making their missionary calls upon their own and the other fellow's growers. The bidding for opportunity will be large this year, as several new and young and vigorous wholesalers are in the field. Fortunately the big city is growing tremendously and in the universal prosperity there is room for all.

The Ford brothers are on deck again after their three weeks' outing. Michael Ford graced the board walk and the ocean at Atlantic City.

It is President Traendly's turn next week and his breathing spell begins at Washington, his partner having come back to civilization and the strenuous life, well colored by his country experience.

Joe Fenrich and his bride are still honeymooning on Long Island.

Nicholas Lecakes and his wife will make a southern trip next week, visiting his sources of galax supply.

On Thursday of this week the big floral carnival at Red Bank, N. J., takes place. Our old friend, Nicholas Butterbach, is one of the judges. His handiwork in decorative art as illustrated on the beautiful estate where he is superintendent, is a sufficient attestation as to his fitness for criticism in any line of floral skill.

A visit to Wm. Turner's home and the magnificent place in his charge was a revelation. To accomplish the finished and perfect result here seen in less than five years seems little short of a miracle.

One familiar face will be missed at the convention. Patrick O'Mara left on Monday for Portland, Ore. Miss O'Mara accompanied him. He goes via the Canadian Pacific and through Winnipeg, returning via San Francisco and Denver, a trip long contemplated and one that will furnish food intellectual for his brother clubites during the coming winter.

The bowling team of New Yorkers will be selected on the special Monday. So many experts are going there will be no difficulty in picking five invincibles. Next year the New York Florists' Club will have a bowling club of its own. Buttons seem to be the popular badge this year. New York will have one for all the club members.

Thos. Miller, of Walter Sheridan's, has found a new lease of life in the mountains and is back at the old stand in excellent health.

Bertanzel, of Great Neck, has left the ranks of private gardeners for the responsibilities and anxieties of the grower and is building three greenhouses 25x300 at Roslyn, L. I.

Schloss Bros. will have a fine ribbon exhibit at Washington. Both the brothers, as usual.

Julius Rochrs, Sr., has been reported seriously ill. Many of the families in the trade have one or more members of their household sick. Those who attended the club's outing will be sorry to know that the young lady who injured her knee in the running races is still unable to put her foot to the ground and has been confined to her bed ever since the accident occurred.

Reed & Keller have a new frame for a floral design. It is a broken fluted column seven feet high, with massive anchor and chain, perfectly carried out in every detail. They will show it at the convention. J. Austin Shaw.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The market has been in rather poor shape, asters being overdone, the poorer grades finding an outlet in the streets at wretched prices. The better grades have been affected, but with the addition of Semple's it is expected a better demand will be created. Gladioli have also suffered. In fact the market generally is weak, Beauties being an exception. There is a fair supply of home-grown in addition to the out-of-town stock, for all of which there is a demand. The Japanese hydrangea has made its appearance, the early blooms bringing pretty fair prices. Greens, especially asparagus, are selling a little better.

The Light Under a Bushel.

It is recognized all over the States that the district lying adjacent to the Delaware and Schuylkill, near where the waters of the rivers unite, stands at the very pinnacle of horticultural fame. There are located the great supply houses that distribute their manufactures and imports all over the country. There may be found the great plant factories, whose palms are the standard of excellence in every part of this country. There are the great commission houses that have improved and centralized the entire product of six counties, to say nothing of points outside, and distributed that product to an ever increasing market. There too, may be found the places of the cut flower growers whose Beauties, and carnations, and valley, and teas, and violets, and dahlias have made them famous in far distant towns.

But it is of none of these industries that I wish to speak today, but of one less lauded but none the less important, an industry without which none of the others could have achieved their present proportions, or could even have existed. What use could we have for crepe paper, pot covers, plant stands, jardinieres or screens if we had no pots? How could we manage our palm growing places without pots?

How could our commission houses get good stock or how could our growers produce it unaided by pots? Yet how little thought is given to the knowledge, enterprise and sagacity required to develop this industry. There was a time, not so many years gone by, when the florists placed their orders in the fall for the pots they would need in the spring. Later orders were filled in rotation as received, often necessitating vexatious delays during the busy season. Now all this is changed and through the enterprise of J. G. Whilldin and of the Keller Brothers, pots and pans in all sizes are manufactured and stored ready for instant shipment. The florist of today does not have to place his order six months ahead. He simply looks over his houses today, decides to shift a certain block of plants, and sends his order to Wharton street or to Norristown, as the case may be, confident that he will receive the desired size with dispatch.

Am I not right in thinking that the pottery industry has been hidden like the light under a bushel? That much credit is due makers who promptly deliver big orders within a radius of something like ten miles, or as promptly ship equally big orders with safety to more distant points.

Various Notes.

Edwin Lonsdale read a good paper on the club's history from 1885 to 1895 before the August meeting of the Florists' Club. It will be printed with the by-laws.

Oglesby B. Paul, landscape gardener at Fairmount park, will address the convention of the S. A. F. next Thursday evening on "The ideal country home for the man with a long head and a short purse."

Edward Reid is receiving fine Beauties, asters and valley.

Joseph Heacock is experiencing an encouraging demand for his fine kentias. The large sizes are especial favorites with the buyers who are quick to recognize extra fine specimens.

Samuel S. Pennock is going to the convention.

J. N. King, the well-known florist of Norristown, is now coroner of Montgomery county.

Charles E. Meehan is going to the convention.

A meeting of the creditors of Joseph Kift & Son was held on Monday at 1416 South Penn square. No settlement could be reached. A sale in bankruptcy was ordered for August 22. It is possible that a settlement may be effected before that time.

The Flower Market did an exceptionally good July business, the sales for that month more than equaling those of July and August, 1904, combined.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving fine Sunrise roses from Myers & Samtman.

Fred J. Michell is going to the convention.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving some outdoor grown carnations.

M. Rice & Co.'s new catalogue is out. The cover is beautifully designed and rich in color. The novelties are described in the opening pages, the staples and standard supplies being further back. All are clearly illustrated. Among the former are lantern globes of silk fiber in colors and rose bowls of the same material with enameled pans inside.

Leo Niessen is going to Washington.

Herbert G. Tull is enjoying the cool breezes of Eaglesmere.

Paul Berkowitz is going to Washington.

The annual report of the Flower Market for the year ending June 30 is excellent. The stall rents will be advanced from $60 to $75 a year in October.

The Summer Florist.

By an Unknown.

Under a shady hill they sat;
He held her hand, she held his hat;
I held my breath and lay quite flat.
They kissed—I saw them do it!

He held that kissing was no crime;
She held her head up every time;
I held my peace, and wrote this rhyme.
They never knew I knew it.

PHIL.

At a recent meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, it was on motion decided to invite all members of the S. A. F. on their way to the convention to be held at Washington, D. C., who can conveniently do so, to stop off at Philadelphia and call at the club rooms, Broad street, above Spruce, where the glad hand and refreshments will be cordially extended.

Vegetable Forcing.

TOMATOES.

Considerable diversity of opinion exists regarding the advantages and disadvantages of the different methods of training tomato plants. Some believe in three stems, while others contend that the single stem method is better. On the whole I believe that more fruit can be produced per foot of bench space from single-stem plants as a general rule. A great deal undoubtedly depends upon the house in which the plants are grown. If the house is first-class in every way, so that plenty of light can reach the plants on every side, there is no great difference in results, but otherwise the single stem has the advantage. Each individual plant having its individual space, the distribution of light is more uniform. With the three stems more or less crowding is hard to avoid. Of course, the single-stem system entails the raising of more than double the number of plants, but when the plants are raised at home this does not count for much extra outlay.

Before planting it must be decided which method of training is to be followed, so that the plants can be set accordingly. For single-stem plants about two and one-half feet of bench space should be allowed to each plant and for three-stem plants four and one-half feet will be about right.

With either of the systems it is necessary to confine the roots to a certain extent, so as to check the growth sufficiently to promote early setting and ripening of the fruit, but care must be exercised not to lessen the vigor of the plants more than is necessary. Where raised benches are employed the problem of confining the roots is already solved, as long as the soil is no more than eight inches deep and the plants are set at the proper distance, but where solid beds are employed or the plants set on the floor level, some means should be adopted to prevent the plants from having too much room to ramble or rankness of growth may result. This applies more to the single-stem plants than to those with three stems. The extra drain on them, having so much more foliage to support, helps to balance the growth, so that there is less danger of grossness.

In setting, the plants should be set well down to do away with as much bare stem as possible. They will throw out new roots from the stem as far up as it is covered with soil. At first water around the plants only, but give sufficient to make sure that it reaches the bottom of the ball. Later increase the radius of the water, according as the roots reach the surrounding soil. It is well to see that the ball of earth containing the roots is not too dry before the plants are set in the bench, for if dry they are apt to remain in this condition, the water passing off through the looser soil instead of penetrating the hard, dry mass. If the plants are to be grown to three stems, two side shoots should be taken away as near the bottom of the stem and as nearly opposite one another as possible, all other shoots and all lateral growths being pinched off as they appear.

For single-stem plants all that is necessary is to keep all side growths off and concentrate all the strength of the plant into the one stem. We have sometimes found it necessary to prune off part of the foliage to somewhat check the growth when the plants showed too much vigor, but with the root space properly balanced this should not be necessary. After the plants have a good hold in their new quarters and are well under way they may appear rather vigorous, but according as they attain size and begin to set fruit the rapidity of growth will naturally decline and it will be found that no pruning of foliage will be needed.

Skinner Patented Sprinkler in Cucumber House of Miller Bros.

PROGRESSIVE GROWERS.

The progressive firm of Miller Bros., Toledo, O., has probably one of the most up-to-date vegetable forcing plants in the state. The houses, which are of the Dietsch short-roof style, have been up but about a year, and are excellent examples of modern greenhouse building. There is one solid bed in each house, with a walk on each side. The sides of the beds, which are low, are made of cement. The Yarian system of heating is employed, and has given them great satisfaction during the past year. Everything about this place is the best that money can buy, and all the houses are equipped with the C. W. Skinner patented system of watering. In putting in this system they have adopted some new features that it will be well for others to pattern after. One line is used to each house and is supported as shown, in one of the accompanying illustrations, by a single wire attached to the ridge and fastened to a japanned ring, through which the pipe is run. Their main leads across the houses at the center, with the sprinkling lines leading from each side. The other illustration shows how this is done, and also shows the combined union tee and strainer as is used with this system.

This firm not only finds that the Skinner system saves them much labor in applying the water, but state that the cucumbers so watered show a marked improvement over the hose watered houses.

Geo. Bayer, of Toledo, has also installed this system and expects good results with his chrysanthemums, which are in the houses so equipped.

Visitors to Washington next week desiring to see the Skinner system in operation can do so at the grounds of the Department of Agriculture, or at H. A. Dreer's, at Riverton, N. J., or at the Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y.

is as far in advance as it is in the field; so far, indeed, that many have refused to accept it, and have said that after they have seen it tried it will be time enough for them to put it in. These "doubting Thomases" need wait no longer as the in so many different places that its success is assured. It has been found to be not only a success in the vegetable house, but in the florists' establishments as well.

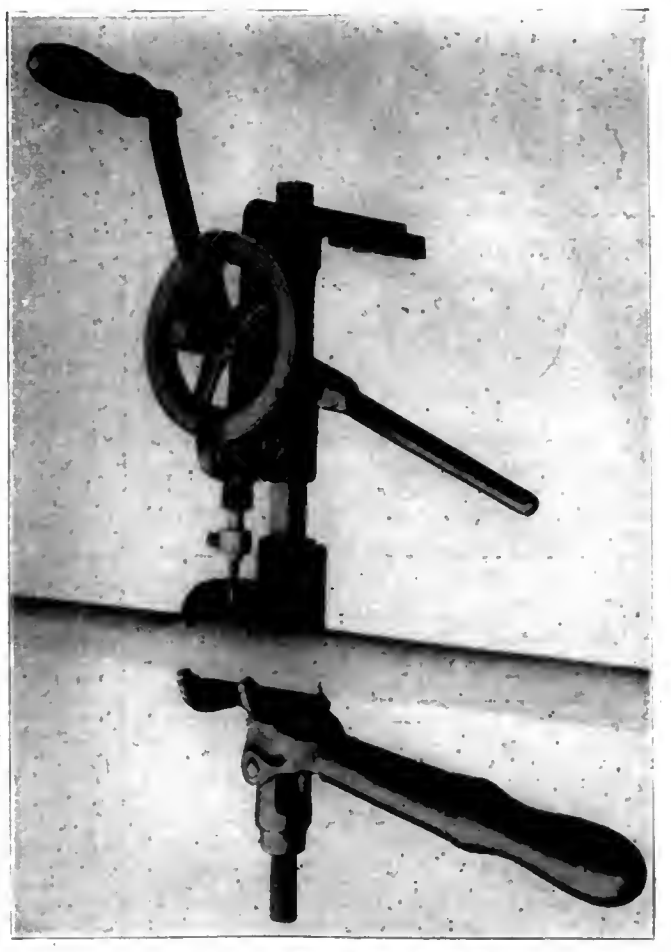
Not only can a house be thoroughly and uniformly watered without any labor, but all plants have a more vigorous and healthy growth. Then, too, a house can be dampened the entire length alike almost instantly. Also, in smoking the houses, by spraying at the same time the smoke is cooled and settles to the ground. This not only prevents the smoke from injuring the most delicate plant, but makes it much more effective.

Just think of it! You who paddle around in the water all day with a hose, with this system and a small and inexpensive gasoline pumping outfit, you can apply 2,000 gallons of water an hour, and be at work in the dry, doing something else at the same time.

Then, too, you have no hose to rot out, as this system once put in is good for a lifetime, and not only that, but the increased value of your crops will each year equal the cost of putting in the system.



Now is the time to install this system, so as to have it in readiness for the fall crops. You will be surprised to see how easy it is to install and you will wonder how you were able to get along without it.

To all who are now paying from 10c to 20c per 1000 gallons for water, you need do so no longer. Our pumping outfits are not expensive, are easy to operate and will give you a water supply equal to the best city systems. With them your water cost will not be over 2c per 1000 gallons. In this new and improved outfit the pump can be cut out in a few seconds and the engine used for other purposes.

I will always be pleased to hear from anyone interested, even if you are not expecting to make any change at this time. Let me hear how you are situated. It will cost nothing to get an estimate on your plant.

Growers of Chicago and vicinity can get estimates of the system put up complete, and will also be shown the system in operation, by calling on the greenhouse builders

The Club Outing.

Giessen's garden, opposite Riverside cemetery, was the place chosen to hold the annual outing of the Cleveland Florists' Club. A merry crowd gathered there on August 2. It was too bad more did not come. Those who staid at home missed lots of fun. The cake walk and fat men's race created more amusement than a cage full of monkeys. In the bowling contests the prizes were hotly contested, especially among the fair sex. Many a wry face could be seen when the ball rolled down the gutter. In the bowling an umbrella was won by A. L. Brown; box of cigars, by Isaac Kennedy; bottle, by W. P. Griffin; another bottle, by A. E. Hart, and a mustache cup, by Fred Whitthune.

By the lady bowlers an imported veil was won by Mrs. Fred Ponting; a bottle of cologne, by Mrs. C. H. Wilson; a bottle of perfume, by Mrs. W. P. Griffin; Japanese picture, by Miss Bessie Kennedy; a bolt of ribbon, by Mrs. A. L. Brown; cream pitcher, by Mrs. H. A. Hart.

The booby prize was also won by Mrs. Hart.

A bottle of "Scotch" was won by Gordon Gray for being the best-looking man on the grounds, decided by the ladies' vote. An automobile veil was won by Mrs. B. Hart for being the best-looking lady on the ground, decided by the men.

The running race for young ladies was won by Miss Evelyn Kennedy. The running race for ladies 25 years and over was won by Mrs. A. L. Brown. The race for girls under 14 was won by Miss Whitthune. The cake walk was won by Mrs. Brown and her partner, Wm. Henry Kunz.

The fat men's race was won by H. Brainard. In this race "Billy" Stadie did not think he got a fair show and challenged the rest of the fat men to a race and beat them all.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Bloy are visiting in Buffalo.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

VISITED CHICAGO.—R. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

FRED MEYER, of the New Ulm Seed Co., New Ulm, Minn., is on a wedding trip to Europe.

CONSIDERABLE quantities of freesia bulbs grown in the Azores have reached this country, some of them injured by heating.

THE blight that did so much damage to the cucumber crop two years ago has again made its appearance. How extensive its inroads may be, or how much it will affect the seed crop, will likely develop within the next two weeks.

THE stock and good will of the well known Surrey Seed Co., Redhill, England, which became involved in financial difficulties, has been sold to a new concern, the Bedfordshire Seed Co.

CHICAGO.—Summer trade with the houses supplying seeds to market gardeners is far above the average. Beans, turnip, spinach and all other seeds for summer planting have been in brisk demand.

AN English steamship company has made a gratuitous distribution of Bermuda grown onions to all the principal hotels and restaurants in London, for the purpose of widening their use and adding to the quantity carried.

A PROMINENT western seedsman says he can get no satisfactory information as to the probable outcome of the seed crops from those with whom he has contracts, but that he gets plenty of offers at attractive prices from growers with whom he has no contracts.

A LEADING Chicago seedsman catering to the market gardening trade says that in his judgment there is no limit to the possible development of the vegetable forcing industry. He believes that, except possibly for leaf lettuce, the large receipts of southern outdoor vegetables is not a serious menace, as the quality of general indoor crops is so much superior.

A MAN who had made quite a success in another line recently started out to market a weed puller. He spent close to $1,000 a month in the general publications but found they didn't pull. Next season he will ask seedsmen to catalogue his device. Incidentally it is worthy of note that the Saturday Evening Post paid for a time, which was more than any other medium did.

IT is reported that the E. J. Bowen seed business in San Francisco will shortly be closed up and that C. C. Morse & Co. will take over their Pacific coast general seed business, independent of the commission box trade. They will issue a general catalogue and solicit what business there may be, confining operations to the coast and continuing growing as before. Headquarters will be removed from Santa Clara to San Francisco about January 1.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued a revised edition of the bulletin on the striped cucumber beetle, describing remedies.

IT looks as though the importer who aroused the ire of his competitors by his early quotations on French Romans knew exactly what he was about.

W. W. RAWSON is quoted as saying of cucumbers for forcing: "New seed will produce the strongest vines and will germinate much quicker than older seed, say two or three days. I prefer seed five or six years old that will germinate in six or seven days. They will produce more fruit with less vine than new seed. I do not think the percentage of germination is any better in new seed than in seed five or six years old."

HOLLAND SEED CROPS.

Sluis & Groot, Enkhuizen, Holland, report that last autumn the weather was continually very dry, especially in September and October, and consequently many plants have developed poorly. This applies especially to turnips, sorrel, swedes and kohlrabi, so that in general the plantations are smaller than last year. The mild winter was favorable for the crops and only a few plants were killed. In a general way of speaking, the weather has been most favorable; but the worm has materially impaired cabbages and turnips, so that the entire yield, they think, will prove not up to the average.

Prospects of the growing crops for flower seeds are not quite so favorable as last year, yet they say that if the weather continues favorable until the season closes, the crop as a whole will be a full average one. The continually fine weather caused most plants to be small but seedy. If this weather lasts some six weeks longer they say they are likely to harvest seed of excellent quality.

NEW ORLEANS.

The Market.

Since our last report the unpleasant rumor of yellow fever around New Orleans has checked business. Sunday the flower market at the French market, where the best and most plants are sold, was entirely bare. Of the five florists who were there the week previous, only one was present this time. Funeral orders might be on the increase, but we hope it will not last. We wish an increase of business brought by different circumstances.

Flowers are quite abundant in the gardens, but the quality is very poor. Orders have to be filled with northern roses and carnations kept in the ice-box, but with 90 to 100 degrees of heat outside their keeping qualities are of very short duration.

Various Notes.

J. H. Menard is potting a large lot of runners of Piersoni Elegantissima from plants received in the spring. He is well satisfied with the new plant, of which he expects a large sale when better known. One of the superiorities of Elegantissima is keeping true to its character without going back to the Boston fern. His chrysanthemums are healthy. He grows them outside, with slight protection when the buds appear. He claims them to grow just as well as under glass.

R. Ory has been moving to his new quarters on Oak street, near Carrolton avenue. With a larger place and his own property he expects to increase his business largely.

A. Alost is bringing to the market large quantities of field-grown roses from his place on Gentilly road.

P. Rielman, who is growing early vegetables with plants and flowers, had the misfortune to ship his beans to Chicago at a very bad time, consequently he had very poor returns.

A. Cook, a brother of M. Cook and an old florist of New Orleans, died a few days ago. He was never established on his own account, working with other florists, being lately with E. Valdejo. His knowledge of horticultural matters was well thought of by the craft.

M. M. L.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pleasant weather with nothing to do is not satisfactory even to the hired help. They cannot all get away at once and those who remain only fret over the continued idleness. Last week, business was reported bad, but if half the reports and complaints are true, the business thermometer is pretty close to zero, and this with quantities of fine asters, gladioli, lilies and roses to be had at your own price, the opportunity of your life to make money and not an order in sight. In the wholesale houses it is even worse, as they are compelled to handle the large lots of stock coming in, and having no outlet for much of it except the garbage box, are wondering how they can satisfy their consignors, but they are a hopeful lot and expect to see it brighten up before long.

Various Notes.

Randolph & McClement's store and greenhouse men have organized base ball clubs and have many lively games after business hours, and while they are not professionals they play all the fine points of the game. "Fitzy" is the crack pitcher of the store nine. Ed Weaver, one of the store rooters, has taken his wife and family to the mountains.

Miss Catherine Friel, cashier for A. M. Murdoch, has gone to Atlantic City on a two weeks' vacation.

Geo. Eichorn has just returned from Scranton, Pa., where he went as a representative of the Allegheny Harro Garro Society.

About thirty-five persons have declared their intention of attending the S. A. F. convention. They expect to leave on the 8:00 a. m. train, which will give them a delightful ride on the picturesque B. & O., arriving in Washington about 6:00 p. m. Monday. E. C. Reineman is arranging for a parlor car and refreshments for the trip. They expect to spend a pleasant day.

E. C. Ludwig and family left last week for Atlantic City. Mr. Ludwig will run over to Washington for the convention.

T. P. Langhans, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., reports from Bobcaygeon, Ontario, Canada, one day's fishing, one 'lunge, seven pounds, one ten pounds, one five pounds and one three and three-quarter pound bass, all landed with that little toothpick rod of his. He reports fishing good in that section.

Uncle John Wyland with a small party will go to Atlantic City and run over to Washington a couple of days during the convention.

Wm. Falconer will have business in Boston on August 14, which will probably compel him to miss the convention. He says he regrets very much being unable to attend, but his heart will be with the boys.

The Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co. will be represented at the convention by Fred Burki and Mr. Kocher.

Walter Breitenstein, with a number of his friends, business men of this city, is leading the outdoor life. They have a clubhouse up the Allegheny river, within an hour's ride of their business, where they eat and sleep outdoors and amuse themselves canoeing and entertaining their friends.

Hoo-Hoo.

THE REVIEW is very satisfactory to me. Being a retail florist I very much appreciate the matter pertaining to our branch of the business and feel that I would not like to do without it.—THOS. A. IVEY, Brantford, Ont.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

During the past month trade has been somewhat slow and, with the exception of funeral work, there was little doing. Roses are looking well and the prospects for an early cut from young stock are good. Beauties are promising well and are planted in about the same quantities as last season. Meteors have been discarded in favor of Richmond, which seems to be at home in the local soil and conditions.

Carnation planting is being pushed vigorously and by the end of the week they will be nearly all benched. This is a few weeks earlier than last season. They are coming in from the field in fine shape. The quantities planted will considerably exceed those of last season.

The growers have put quite a spurt into building operations. Harry N. Hoffman is increasing his plant by about 6,000 square feet, which he is devoting to carnations.

Geo. Backer has purchased two houses from the Rawson estate and is busy moving them to his own place. This will give an addition of 6,000 square feet. He intends planting them to roses.

The United States Cut Flower Co. is erecting one house 22x200 to be used as a stock house. They are also building a cool room on the most modern plans in which to prepare their cut for shipment. The roses on this place are looking especially fine, their block of Richmonds being really excellent.

The contingent for the convention from here will be small, Supt. Curran of the United States Cut Flower Co., being the only one who has signified the intention of attending.

Recent visitors: R. O. King, No. Tonawanda, N. Y.; John C. Hatcher, Amsterdam; the Granam Brothers, Binghamton.

PACIFIC COAST.

CARNATION NOTES.

Owing to the unprecedented hot weather we experienced several weeks ago many of the growers had an idea that the young stock planted in the open ground might suffer. We had very cool days immediately before it and the young foliage was very soft, but in making a tour among some of our largest growers I find that in a majority of the places the stock seems to be in perfect condition.

There is complaint about the quality of cuttings sent to California by some eastern carnation growers. It seems to be the aim of some propagators of new sorts to strike every piece of wood, whether it will ever make a plant or not. Of a particular lot I was shown last spring, when received from the east, it was evident that the greater portion of the cuttings were taken from flower stems and when I saw the same batch this week after they had been planted a couple of months in the open field, the grower explained that he would not make any effort to force them for flowers, being content to get a supply of cuttings for next season.

There is very little thrip in the vicinity of San Francisco this season. Many growers who never pretend to cut any fancy Lawson or other similar kinds from May to October have had little or no thrip to contend with this season. This is due to the unusual number of dark days and foggy nights and the growers are greatly benefited thereby.

I find that the varieties being mostly planted for the coming season run about as follows:

In white Flora Hill easily takes the lead, although it has probably been thrown out oftener than any other kind. Boston Market and Queen Louise are second on the list, some growers preferring them to Hill. Lady Bountiful will be planted quite extensively by several growers and White Lawson and Gov. Wolcott in a few places. There are several other new whites that are being tried by various growers, but the varieties I have mentioned are the kinds principally in use.

In pink Mrs. Lawson finds the most adherents, with Enchantress a close second. Of the newer varieties Fiancee seems to be in the lead and of the oldest sorts Joost, Scott and Crocker are still handled in the smaller establishments. A great many wholesale growers have ordered largely of Hannah Hobart, the stock of which will not be ready before January next.

With scarlets many do not like Estelle, but as yet there seems to be nothing to take its place. Flamingo has been discarded. A few good beds of Crusader are shown. Crane has also been thrown out. Of the darker shades Harlowarden is planted principally and in some places Harry Fenn and Roosevelt.

In variegated Prosperity is still the best thought of, although it appears to be running out in some of the places. John Carbone easily ranks the best for a fancy yellow and its blooms command the highest prices. Iris Miller is not seen as much as formerly, although it is a good seller when well grown. Mrs. Patten does not seem to be a favorite here, although I heard one or two growers praise it highly. None of the yellows is grown as much as formerly. Eldorado is most planted and I saw several good beds of Pingree. Of other variegated sorts Marshall Field, Armazindy and Gaiety are grown, but not in quantity.

I could lengthen this list somewhat but I have mentioned the principal varieties grown in about twenty of our best establishments and they represent the majority of the growing here.

There is not quite as much glass being erected up to this time this year as there was last season, the price of flowers, in the judgment of the growers, not warranting the expending of as much money in new glass as formerly. I find, however, that the price of fancy stock does not get any cheaper; on the contrary, it holds its own, with a tendency to climb upward. On second quality stock, however, the price has never been lower than at present, which goes to show that the growers must learn to specialize; above all, find out what variety or varieties their culture is especially suited to and what articles do especially well in their particular localities; then bend all their energies to producing that particular flower a little better than any one else. When the store men find out that they can always count on a first-class article from a certain grower, he can set his own price.

G.

PORTLAND, ORE.

Business during the past two weeks has been above expectations, owing to the large number of exposition visitors in the city and an unusual amount of funeral work. Indications are that there will be no marked dull season in Portland this summer if good, salable flowers are to be had. Stock, however, is beginning to show the effects of the continued warm weather and good roses and red carnations are almost unobtainable. Asters and auratum lilies are the latest and most welcome additions to the list of cut flowers.

A visit to the various growing establishments reveals the fact that there is less building going on around Portland this season than for several years past. About the only new glass noted are the four substantial houses built by W. S. Sibson, on the Milwaukee road, and planted with the best varieties of forcing roses. Mr. Sibson is a new arrival in the florists' ranks, having recently secured twenty-five acres of land upon which he intends to grow roses on a large scale. He now has about seven acres planted, including all the standard sorts and many new varieties recently imported from Europe.

L. G. Pfunder, Portland's pioneer florist, has sold his city property, including his store building and residence, for $100,000. Mr. Pfunder made just $20,000 by holding his place the last two years. He will continue occupying the property for the present, but will eventually remove nearer the business center of the city.

HANNAH HOBART THE PRIDE OF CALIFORNIA

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Clealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificient variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906.

Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation. Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather continues cool and the quality of stock is generally good. Asters are in season and, although not yet at their most prolific time, they are very plentiful. The price averages about 25c per dozen for the best flowers and for smaller blooms and shorter stems there is no fixed rate. Carnations are not very plentiful and will continue scarce for a month or more, or until the growers have finished changing their stock. With roses there is even less display and of first quality stock there is nothing whatever shown. Some Brides and Maids are divided up among the stores daily and likewise a few Beauties and Kaiserins but they are nothing to brag of. Lilium album and rubrum are filling a long felt want at present. They cost the stores from $1 to $1.50 a dozen stems. They have the advantage of keeping much longer than any other lily and are one of the most satisfactory flowers to handle. Amaryllis of the large pink variety is in season also and they also are good sellers. Dahlias, coreopsis and gaillardias are on the wane.

I might add that business is about as quiet as I have ever seen it, not only in the florists' trade but in almost all lines of retail business here. But the continued cool weather has commenced to bring our city people back to town and when the schools again open I have no doubt we will have business.

There is some demand for lily of the valley and there are but few being offered at present.

Various Notes.

D. Raymond, of San Jose, is in town.

The Society Hortensia, of Oakland, has decided not to hold an exhibition this fall. They will devote their energies to assisting the State Floral Society's flower show in the ferry building.

The conservatories at Golden Gate park will repay a visit at this time. The display of ferns, crotons and caladiums is especially worthy of mention.

P. Babros, of the Eureka Wire Works, calls attention to the fact that the amount of wire-frames used by our largest florists grows less each year, and the amount used in many of the smaller stores increases proportionately.

F. D. Shields is on a month's vacation. He will visit the Portland exposition before he returns.

George Miller, one of the pioneer florists of this city and father of John Miller, the Larkin street florist, is sick at the Alameda county hospital.

The young carnation stock on the grounds of P. McDonell, at Alden, looks remarkably well at present. Mr. McDonell will commence transplanting this week. G.

DETROIT.

At a meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club August 2 the following officers were elected: President, William Dilger; vice-president, James Taylor, of Mt. Clemens; secretary, J. F. Sullivan; treasurer, Walter Taepke; librarian, Norman Sullivan.

President Dilger is one of the best-known men in the state. He is manager of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange and active in all trade affairs. The club now has a membership of eighty and will send more than twenty to the convention.

Arrangements are being made to entertain visitors at breakfast August 14, when Chicago and St. Louis will meet here en route to the convention.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

It looks as though the production of California privet might easily be overdone. There was no scarcity last spring.

There does not appear to be any prospect of a surplus of cherry trees for years to come, although the output is increasing.

The import orders for English Manetti stocks are heavier than usual, rose forcers everywhere being interested by the showing grafted plants have made in the east.

This has been a splendid season for growth in the middle West, some nurserymen reporting that stock has increased in size as much as in two average years.

Peony growers reported a very large business just after the Chicago show by the national society, but July was a quiet month. However, as planting time approaches business is picking up again.

The Highland Colony Co., after some years of trial, have proven that the Alberta peach is best adapted to the conditions about Ridgeland, Miss., which is becoming quite a peach growing center. Next to Alberta they recommend Carmen and Greensboro.

The gentleman whose eloquence carried the nurserymen's convention to Dallas for 1906, seems not to have maintained that Texas is a land of milk and honey but rather a spot where one may look for plenty of spring chickens and a more virulent liquid than mineral water.

The Horticultural Advertiser suggests that, while American peony growers have in the past been large buyers in Europe, from all reports it seems likely that the tide will soon turn in the other direction, or will at least resolve itself into an exchange, so many are the promising American seedlings.

PEONIES IN THE SOUTH.

It would be impossible to tell just what varieties of peony would be most satisfactory in the south, but I see no reason why they should not thrive there if given the proper treatment. I have seen fine blooms of officinalis rubra grown in southern Tennessee. Plant in good, rich soil. Scatter stable manure on the ground about the plants every fall as long as they remain there. Do not cut any flowers until the plants have become firmly established; three years is not too long to wait. After they are through blooming do not allow the stems to be broken off until they have matured in the fall; better leave them until spring. It is no use trying tree peonies in the south, for they will seldom bloom; the early frosts kill the buds just about the time they begin to start good in the spring.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The State Florists' Association of Indiana will hold its annual picnic at Broadripple park on August 30. It was decided at the meeting on August 1 that only members and their employes are to be invited. All members who were not at the meeting, as well as those throughout the state, will please take notice and arrange to attend. There is to be plenty of amusement for all.

There is to be a larger delegation to the S. A. F. convention than usual from here. Those intending to go are A. Wiegand and wife, H. W. Rieman and wife, F. Carson and wife, Irwin Bertermann, Wm. Billingsley, John Grande and F. Sydney Smith. The party expects to visit Atlantic City, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore besides Washington and expects to be gone ten days. A. B.

Here is another dollar for the Review. I would not be without it for I find it the most satisfactory of all the florists' helps.—T. M. Miller, Jamesville, N. Y.

The Market.

Business is very poor. Everyone is complaining and there does not appear to be any relief in sight. As to the reason for this condition, it is impossible to say.

Stock is more plentiful. Asters are a terrible glut and only the very best find a market. The poorer grades go to the dump. It seems a shame that things should be so, for last year they were in good demand at all times. There is simply no business, so what can you expect? One of the causes for the large supply of asters is that the aster bug has not been prevalent this season. Gladioli are also coming heavily and sell poorly.

A few field-grown carnations are the only ones seen. Roses from young stock are more plentiful but sell slowly.

Beauties are the best and some real good stock is to be had.

Various Notes.

It looks as though there will be a nice party from this city to the S. A. F. convention. E. G. Gillett will be accompanied by his wife and daughter. After the convention they will spend ten days at Asbury Park.

The next meeting of the Florists' Society will take place Thursday evening at Hagner's garden. After the meeting there will be bowling and a lunch.

Wm. Gardner and Geo. Maguire left Saturday for London, Ont., on a two weeks' vacation.

P. Weiland has closed his wholesale house for two weeks. In the meantime his cut is being handled by E. G. Gillett.

With most of the stock planted, the damage caused by the hail storm repaired and the greenhouses in general put in "apple pie" order, Lewis Ullrich was ready to talk convention with all the enthusiasm behooving a stanch devotee of the good cause. It is his opinion that the national capital will draw a large attendance and that the things to be brought up for discussion will prove of permanent interest to the members of the fraternity.

Mr. Ullrich has cleared ground for the erection of four additional houses for roses and carnations. By clearing ground I mean to say that he has actually transformed a hill and hole into a level stretch, the operation requiring a great deal of work at a considerable expense.

A surprise in store for the geranium men is "Ullrich's Seedling." It is a plant of much merit, of dwarf habit, an excellent bedder, large trusses of bloom, a perpetual bloomer, etc. It is quite likely that Mr. Ullrich may put it on the market this fall.

Another good thing on his place is a white seedling carnation, good for either summer or winter blooming. There are white carnations on the market that surpass it in size and in quality, but none for vigor and productiveness.

The Richmond rose as everywhere else is demonstrating its sterling qualities here. From all accounts there is now but one red rose. X.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held on August 4 and the usual floral display was made, consisting of orchids from the collections of Henry Graves, Edwin Thomas, gardener; William Barr, Arthur Bodwell, gardener, and Julius Roehrs, of Rutherford. The last contained several specimens of great beauty. Roses came from President Dietrick Kindsgrab, gardener for William Runkle, asters from William Bennett, gardener for A. C. Van Gaasbaek, and Charles Ashmead, gardener for Mrs. William Pierson. Phlox and some fine Black Hamburg and Muscat grapes were shown by William Read, gardener for the Colgates. Thomas Rivers and Royal George peaches, measuring twelve inches in circumference and weighing twelve ounces, were shown by Peter Duff, gardener for John Crosby Brown. The judges were Charles Blanck, Edward Roehrs and Joseph A. Manda.

The topic for discussion was "Continuous Bloom," illustrated by colored photographs of the prominent estates in the neighborhood, and the president called upon the gardeners one by one to talk.

PRICE OF GLASS.

For the fourth time in less than two months the price of window glass has been raised, and indications point to a still further advance within a short time. August 8 the Western Window Glass Jobbers met at Chicago and raised window glass prices ten per cent, making the total increase in the scale since June 16 a little more than forty per cent.

The jobbers say the increase is unavoidable on account of the shortage in popular sizes caused by the present excessive demand, owing to increased building operations and the closing of factories during the hot weather. Another reason given was the contention over the wage scale between the glass workers and the manufacturers.

It is said that the stocks of manufacturers are nearly exhausted and that a glass famine is in sight, with no immediate relief promised, as the factories will not open until the trouble with the glass workers is adjusted.

FLORIST WARE OF EVERY KIND

BANGOR, ME.

Arthur F. Noyes, a widely known and much respected citizen of Bangor, died August 1, after a long illness, resulting from an injury received several years ago, since which time his health had been gradually failing.

The deceased was the son of the late Albert Noyes, and was born on the old homestead in Bangor, where, since the death of his father, he had carried on the extensive greenhouses and gardens which have for many years been famous here. The elder Noyes was extensively engaged in the manufacture of stoves and tinware, but, indulging his taste for gardening and floriculture, established many years ago the greenhouses and nurseries which in time became an important industry, and the products of which have long been known to Bangor people as of the highest excellence. To the carrying on of this work the deceased devoted his whole time and energy, and his success was substantial. He was a man of the highest character, known and respected by all with whom he had acquaintance, and his death will bring sorrow to many. Mr. Noyes is survived by three brothers and sisters.

MANSFIELD, OHIO.

The Berno Floral Co. reports a good trade, considering the season. Their greenhouses are being thoroughly overhauled and a new brick smokestack is in course of erection. They have acquired recently a valuable tract of land immediately adjoining their property. Additional houses will be built as the increase in business makes necessary. Both rose and carnation plants look well. X.

NORFOLK, VA.—H. L. Aumurn has removed to Riverview. His Parke Avenue Greenhouses are now conducted by L. A. La Charme, who grows a general stock. A. G. Frick contemplates another house for carnations. Business is very quiet just now. W. M. King reports early asters in fine shape and also carnations in the field.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The market has even been duller than last week. Not half the amount of flowers coming in are used up. Asters are now arriving in large quantities, but so far no first-class ones have made their appearance and the bulk of what are shipped in goes to waste. Many good Cochet roses, both pink and white, are thrown out. No doubt the fine weather of the past couple of weeks has had something to do with the present dullness, owing to the low death rate.

Various Notes.

Henry Eberhardt met with a serious accident on his way home from market Saturday night, July 29. His horse became unmanageable and ran away, throwing him from the wagon. He was severely bruised and was taken to the hospital. When last heard of he was slowly recovering.

C. E. Smith, of York, Pa., left on Wednesday by way of Baltimore on a trip to Europe.

A. Stohle for many years a well known florist of Carroll, Md., is dead at the age of 72 years. He came to this country fifty years ago and has been in the florists' business ever since. He was a life-long member of the Baltimore Gardeners' Club. A. F.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—John A. Lambert has assumed the position of superintendent of parks of this city.

MENTOR, O.—Carl Hagenburger has a field of 10,000 asters, which are doing exceedingly well and attracting much attention.

TEN YEARS OF STEADY GROWTH AND STILL GROWING

From an humble beginning, starting smaller than almost any wholesaler in Chicago ever did start, we have built up in ten years of steady growth, a business which warrants us in maintaining the largest and best equipped place in the city.

By careful, conservative management we have worked our way to the front.

We have taken good care of every flower shipped to us and earned the confidence of our growers that we are at all times working for their interests.

We have carefully studied the wants of our customers and proved to their satisfaction that we can be relied on at all times to furnish anything that is to be had in this market, and in addition we make SPECIAL EFFORTS to SUPPLY NOVELTIES or SPECIALTIES not always TO BE HAD ELSEWHERE.

IN THE COMING SEASON

we shall conduct our business along the same lines as heretofore. We shall stand on our record—but we shall PUSH HARDER than ever.

We shall have the stock—both quality and quantity—to do a larger business than ever before. We have a strong force of the most experienced and efficient employes, both in the selling and shipping departments, and they are fully alive to the fact that YOUR interests are the interests of this house.

We solicit the continued patronage of those who have been dealing with us, and we ask for the business of those with whom we have not yet done business, on this pledge: That in the future, as in the past,

WE SHALL GIVE FAIR AND SQUARE TREATMENT TO EVERYONE WITH WHOM WE HAVE DEALINGS.

THE LARGEST

SHIPPING TRADE

DONE IN THE CHICAGO MARKET

Do you realize What that means?

It means that the buyers of high grade Cut Flowers, from Pittsburg to Denver, from Winnipeg to the Gulf, have found our

Prize-Winning Stock

(all grown in our own big range of greenhouses and shipped to you at first hand) to be the

CHEAPEST AND BEST TO BUY

Don't you want to make arrangements with us for your season's supply? Better write us about it now. Beauties, Roses, Carnations, Mums and Lilies of best grade in any quantity. Prices not high, considering quality.

The truth of our assertion that we ship more boxes of Cut Flowers than any other firm in Chicago was proven during the recent teamsters' strike. During that time a teaming association composed of all the wholesale florists carted to the depots all shipments of Cut Flowers from the Chicago Market. These records show that we shipped more boxes than any other house in Chicago. But the records don't show that our boxes (orders) also averaged larger than those of any other house—which was the fact.

INTRODUCTION 1905

There is nothing in the fern line that is as handsome as this beautiful fern when well grown. It is a wonderful improvement over Nephrolepis Piersoni in every respect, both in regard to beauty and habit of growth. It is a sport from the Pierson Fern (Nephrolepis Piersoni), but it is very much more beautiful and of greater value. It is as different from the Pierson Fern as that is from the Boston. The small side pinnæ are again subdivided, producing an exquisite and beautiful effect, changing the entire character of the fronds, which measure less than half the length and about twice the breadth of the fronds of the Pierson Fern. The fronds also assume an entirely different form, the side pinnæ standing at right angles to the mid-rib of the frond, on edge rather than flat, as is usual, making both sides of the frond equally beautiful—entirely different from any other fern.

The plant is very dwarf, only about half the height of the Pierson Fern, and of very much more compact habit. Taking it altogether it makes one of the most exquisite plants and one of the most valuable for table and house decorations that has ever been introduced. The cut fronds, on account of their beauty, will be in great demand for table decoration. Well grown plants make most magnificent specimens.

H. H. BERGER & CO., 47 Barclay St., NEW YORK

ESTABLISHED 1878.

The Washington Convention.

THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS CELEBRATES ITS TWENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

The Next Meeting to be Held at Dayton, Ohio.

OFFICERS FOR 1906:

President, WM. F. KASTING, Buffalo, N. Y.

Vice-President, H. M. ALTICK, Dayton, Ohio.

Secretary, W. J. STEWART, Boston, Mass.

Treasurer, H. B. BEATTY, Oil City, Pa

Year by year the cities which have been visited by the Society of American Florists have established the custom of setting a new high water mark for the open-handed hospitality with which they have welcomed their guests and the elaborateness of the provision made for their entertainment; year by year the trade has shown an awakening and growing appreciation of the whole-souled generosity of their fellow craftsmen in their endeavors to improve the social features of our annual reunions, and year by year an even greater proportion of the society's membership has responded by attendance, to the end that the society's usefulness to the trade, its importance in a business sense and the interest in its work have ever increased. In none of these things did the Washington convention of 1905 fall short of what was expected by the most enthusiastic.

The city of Washington possesses points of interest, aside from trade institutions, in greater number than any other city in the land; the memory of the efficiency of the Washington Florists' Club as a body of entertainers, as demonstrated at a previous convention, had not yet faded; the close of a season of unexampled development in our industry; the near approach of another season with promise of even greater things; our preparedness for it; the realization that the time is ripe for the propulsion of our society to a position in keeping with the advanced public interest in our work; all these helped to bring to Washington a gathering such as had not been seen in the whole twenty-one years of the society's life, and splendidly did Washington arise to the occasion.

Not least notable of the advances was that in the matter of the trade display, and here, unfortunately, was the one point in which Washington was weak—she had no hall adequate. The best that could be done was to use the National Rifles Armory, where two floors were available, each capable of carrying a good-size display, but these were soon full to overflowing and recourse was had to a fine hall in the Masonic Temple in the next street. But even with this the accommodations were not sufficient. George H. Cooke, the superintendent, is to be congratulated on the way he handled an arduous task made much more than usually difficult by the necessity of dividing the exhibition into practically three equal parts.

Every class of the exhibit showed the progress the trade is making. The plantsmen were more largely represented than usual; the bulb men used more space than ever for the display of their wares; the paper box makers showed stronger than before; the greenhouse builders and boiler men were there in force; showing of cut gladioli was a revelation; but in no branch of the trade was there a stronger showing than that made by the dealers in supplies and ribbons. The samples brought by these progressive gentlemen would alone have made a first-class exhibition. Their showing served to demonstrate anew the importance of requisites to every retail florist, to show what infinite variety of forms these helps take and what ingenuity and art is employed in their production and constant improvement.

That our government at Washington is taking an increasing interest in our trade has long been apparent, and to the courtesies of the Department of Agriculture not a few of the pleasures of convention week were due. Not the least of the services was the intercession with the Weather Bureau which brought fine summer weather. Washington called it cool, but there were many who dissented. However the heat was no worse than the society has encountered in more northern cities and the days, and especially the evenings, were far more enjoyable than most of the visitors had at home in the preceding week.

The business sessions were held in Carroll Hall, adjoining the main exhibition building, and there was a splendid gathering present on Tuesday afternoon at 3:15 when President Wm. F. Gude, of the Washington Florists' Club, called the society to order for the formal opening of the convention. The opening ceremonies were delayed by the non-arrival of President Vaughan, and the Chicago, St. Louis and Detroit contingents, who were several hours behind schedule time because of a wreck ahead of their special train, but the postponement did not detract in the least from the enthusiasm.

Mr. Gude spoke briefly in his usual fine voice and introduced J. A. Freeman, vice-president of the S. A. F., who thanked the society for the honor done him in his absence at St. Louis and introduced H. B. F. McFarland, president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to deliver the address of welcome. He said that the florists are the ministers of beauty and it was a pleasure to all to welcome them to the nation's city of beauty. To the product of the growers' skill he paid a tribute, saying that flowers are the language of our people when words will not do. He said he and all Washington hoped the stay would be so pleasant that the society would come every year to this, its legal home, in the month of August, and help to spread the city's fame as a summer resort. (Laughter; it was only 98 degrees in the hall and not a breath of air stirring.) He spoke of the interest the trade has in the present plans for the beautifying of the city named for and planned by George Washington and closed by presenting to the society a gavel made from wood of a laurel planted at Mt. Vernon by Washington and LaFayette.

Mr. Freeman then introduced Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Hayes, to speak in the unavoidable absence of Secretary Wilson who was at Chicago. Mr. Hayes spoke of the strong fellow feeling between the Department and the florists, expressed Mr. Wilson's interest and asked all to visit the Department and see what is being done. He spoke of the pioneer work the florists have done in intensive growing and told of the great wealth created by the application of the florists' exact and scientific methods to the larger field of agriculture. He predicted for the florists' business a great rise in importance to all the people of our country.

Mr. Freeman then introduced J. A. Valentine, of Denver, who spoke briefly but very appreciatively of the welcome extended the society. He spoke of the high appreciation in which the trade holds the Department of Agriculture and assured the assistant secretary that the craft judged lightly certain recently published stories for which the official had asked that no more be thought of it than if the shortcomings related to an equally complex private industry. Of the Commissioner he asked equally light judgment in case any of the members became intoxicated with the warmth of the welcome given us.

President J. C. Vaughan was then introduced and received a splendid greeting at the hands of the members. After a few words of thanks for the reception given him he read his annual address, which was as follows:

President's Address.

At this twenty-first convention and in the presence of many who were with us in 1885 a story well worth hearing could be told of what we have accomplished. This story of earnest work by many, on many lines which made our society a remarkable one in the first few years of its history, should some day be written for us. But as your president, I have too large a conception of our future to devote the time, which your custom gives me, to a backward view. If we made a wonderful advance in the first five years of our existence, what may not our younger members accomplish in the five years which begin today?

Our Opportunity.

There never was a time in our history when opportunities for exploiting our business were greater than today; never a time when the public was so eagerly interested in horticulture and floriculture; never a time when there were so many patrons of floriculture. Nor is this interest a narrow one. It considers the use of horticulture beyond the decoration of private grounds and is alive to its uses in all public ways.

Therefore, I shall emphasize first those lines on which we can work individually and as a body. The individual in his own neighborhood, club, city or state; our society, among clubs, nationally.

Interesting Demand in Plants.

President James Dean said in 1892:

Our advance as a society must be commensurate with and excel the advance of floriculture, which, during the past twenty years, has been phenomenal. The trade has now assumed colossal proportions in America. The efforts of our members have brought floriculture today to be a leading industry of the country.

How true then, and how true today. We have made wonderful progress in caring for the advance of floriculture on cut flower lines. The production of flowers to meet the public demand has been far beyond the expectations of the most sanguine. With few exceptions, in all states of the Union, our members seem to be keeping pace with this growth. But there has grown up within the past three or four years, and more especially within the last year or two, an unusual and general interest in plants. Not that the use of cut flowers has lessened, but the public has decided to have horticultural homes, to live among plants, shrubs and trees. This is the demand we must care for today or we will not come into our own. The public rightfully expects this of us and will reward us with a liberal patronage. I am not sure that we appreciate this as fully as we should..

Vice-President Theodore Wirth, superintendent of Hartford, Conn., parks, gives us earnest advice in his state report of 1904:

The cultivation of the taste for flowers and decorations has become universal. It most decidedly has, and I am not only bold enough to state that the tendency of the public in that direction is greatly due to the influence exercised on same through the floral displays, decorations and cultivation in up-to-date public parks and private grounds, but claim that but a small percentage of the commercial florists of today, both growers and dealers, are ready and prepared to take advantage of the demand stimulated and created through same to their benefit. Hundreds of visitors to our parks want to know where they can procure that or the other plant, all easily grown and adapted to our climate, and when they are given the addresses of our florists they come back and say that those florists don't grow them and don't know them.

If the local florists would aim to keep step with the times by growing such novelties as are proven to be meritorious introductions and which the public want, they would to their own advantage secure a home trade in place of forcing same into the hands of unscrupulous, swindling, fake drummers, that go around the country collecting good money for false, worthless goods.

Our Art in Public Improvements.

A large section of civic improvement work now depends upon the use of our products. Our art is most applicable and available for this purpose. It is used in streets, parks, vacant lots, children's play-grounds, etc. The awakened public interest in horticulture has increased the demand for our aid broadly in this direction. This is our great good fortune and is our opportunity. This favor shown to our profession by our best citizens should be our inspiration. It should cause every florist to join or lead all movements for civic improvement work which have in their scope the use of horticultural products, not for pecuniary advantages that may come directly or indirectly, but for the better reasons that horticulturists can handle such matters intelligently and efficiently, and because they cannot afford to allow any other class of their fellow-citizens to precede them in applying their art to the betterment of mankind. If they have noble opportunities in their chosen pursuit let them be foremost in putting them into practice.

Wm. F. Kasting, President-Elect Society of American Florists.

Begin Improvements at Home.

J. Horace McFarland, president of the American Civic Association, writes:

The Society of American Florists at the Washington convention should co-operate with our association by asking its members to clean up and develop their own places as examples to the communities in which they live. Calling to mind the various floral establishments you have seen, you will remember that many are dirty and unkempt. Sometimes there is a little ornamental front gate and show greenhouse, back of which is an ill-looking potting-shed banked up with rubbish of various kinds. Thus have the florists themselves by dirt and disorder often belied their own profession as beautifiers and decorators. The platform of the American Civic Association is "a more beautiful America," and there should be no people in all the country who are so much in line from a business standpoint as those connected with the horticultural trade.

Many of us can confirm with regret Mr. McFarland's words. There is much for us to do in this direction. We must not only clean up, repair, and paint, but we must burn or bury the rubbish, and we must do more. We must have room for perennials and shrubbery as well as bedding plants in and around our establishments; we must have varied and beautiful window boxes and plants in tubs. These groups of shrubbery, these boxes and potted plants not only decorate our surroundings and make them examples, but from all of these, sales may be continually made and the stock continually replaced. Thus instead of making our betterments an expense we make them a source of added income.

President Lonsdale in 1895 on this line said to you:

The florists' business is something more than the cut flower trade. There is the beautifying of gardens and grounds, much of which comes under the care and suggestion of florists and gardeners. But the first thing every wide-awake florist will do is to beautify his own home and surroundings. It is positively necessary for us to have examples of everything that is good and grown in the most attractive and best possible manner if we would have the desired effect on our surrounding neighborhood.

The Press a Great Aid.

You have all seen the increasing space given to horticulture in the public press. The ablest editions of our metropolitan Sunday papers are alive to the public interest in gardening and not only buy syndicate sheets of horticultural news but employ able writers on special subjects. They are more than ready to receive reliable information of this class. They will gladly print free of charge all gardening news and cultural information we will supply them and such articles could be made of great general good to our trade everywhere.

I find that President Lonsdale in 1895 recommended a press bureau to be attached to the local societies to supply monthly, weekly and daily journals with reliable news and cultural notes. A bureau once established would immediately become authoritative on these questions and would rid us of the exaggerated statements now freely circulated in irresponsible journals, often of such a nature as to make our best people skeptical regarding all horticultural news.

National Council of Horticulture.

This society is asked to be one of six or eight societies to contribute toward carrying forward the work of floriculture in a National Council of Horticulture, whose objects are stated as follows:

To fraternize and concrete the horticultural interests of North America.

To consider the questions of public policy and demonstration which are common to these organizations.

To act as a bureau of publicity in the interests of reliable information pertaining to horticulture in its broadest sense.

It is expected that the nurserymen, seedsmen, pomologists and other societies will co-operate.

I suggest the appointment of a committee to confer with the council, with power to co-operate if in their judgment the plan is practical and advisable.

Exhibitions the Great Uplifters.

President John N. May said August 20, 1889, at Buffalo:

We should do all we can to advance and extend public exhibitions. They are not only educators of florists but of the whole public at large. As workmen we must keep abreast of the times and the best possible opportunity for us to do so is to meet and freely discuss all matters of interest.

President Robert Craig said at Chicago in 1887:

When an exhibition is attempted, every gardener and florist in the neighborhood should, as a matter of personal pride and duty, do his part in the work. It is often complained that the public does not sufficiently appreciate the floral shows. Is it not because they are so frequently unworthy? If we open to the people a good show, we can depend upon moral and financial support.

With the recent great awakening of public interest in floriculture we have all seen the tendency of the promoters of various charitable and other enterprises to make prominent the floral sections of their bazaars, or even to institute, on behalf of some worthy society or charity, a so-called flower show. This tendency is particularly noticeable in California and there is need of emphasizing President Craig's counsel of 1887. Should it not be the duty of every local florist or gardener wherever an exhibition is attempted under the banner of a flower show, to come forward and insist that the affair be a creditable one, since we all know that every exhibition of this kind, if poorly carried on, is a direct reflection on every local member of our profession. We are, in the public mind, held responsible. It follows, therefore, that we must take hold and have it properly exploited, or deferred until such time as it can be creditably carried out. Otherwise, future exhibitions in the same locality, undertaken by our craft and with our best efforts, will be discredited by the public because of the fake shows which we have without protest allowed to be undertaken.

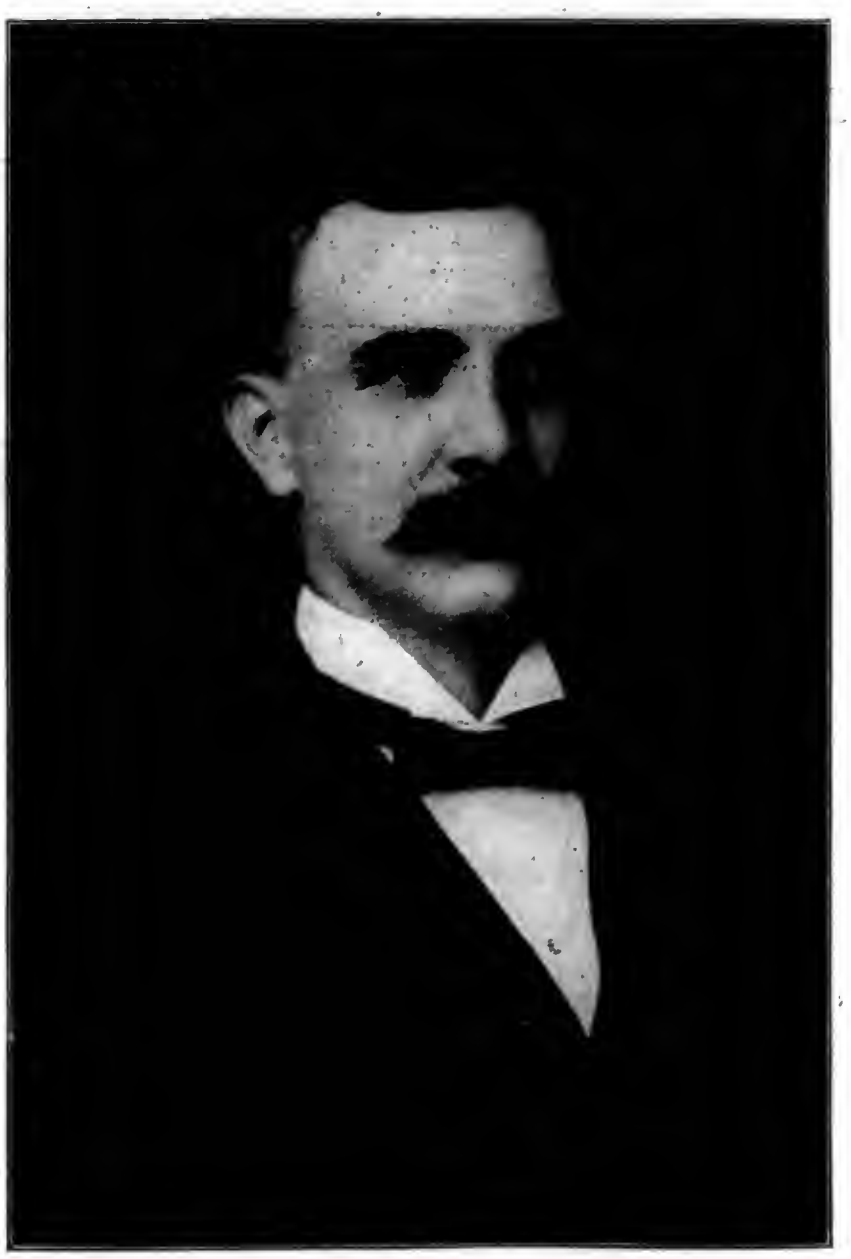
Horticulture in the Public Schools.

At Boston, in 1890, President J. M. Jordan said: "No school of recognized ability to graduate a pupil should leave out of its curriculum books teaching the fundamental lessons in horticulture, and even our common schools should teach the rudiments of this art."

President Lonsdale in 1895 recommended the study of botany in the public schools in the primary grades. In this connection Prof. J. F. Cowell in 1895 wrote:

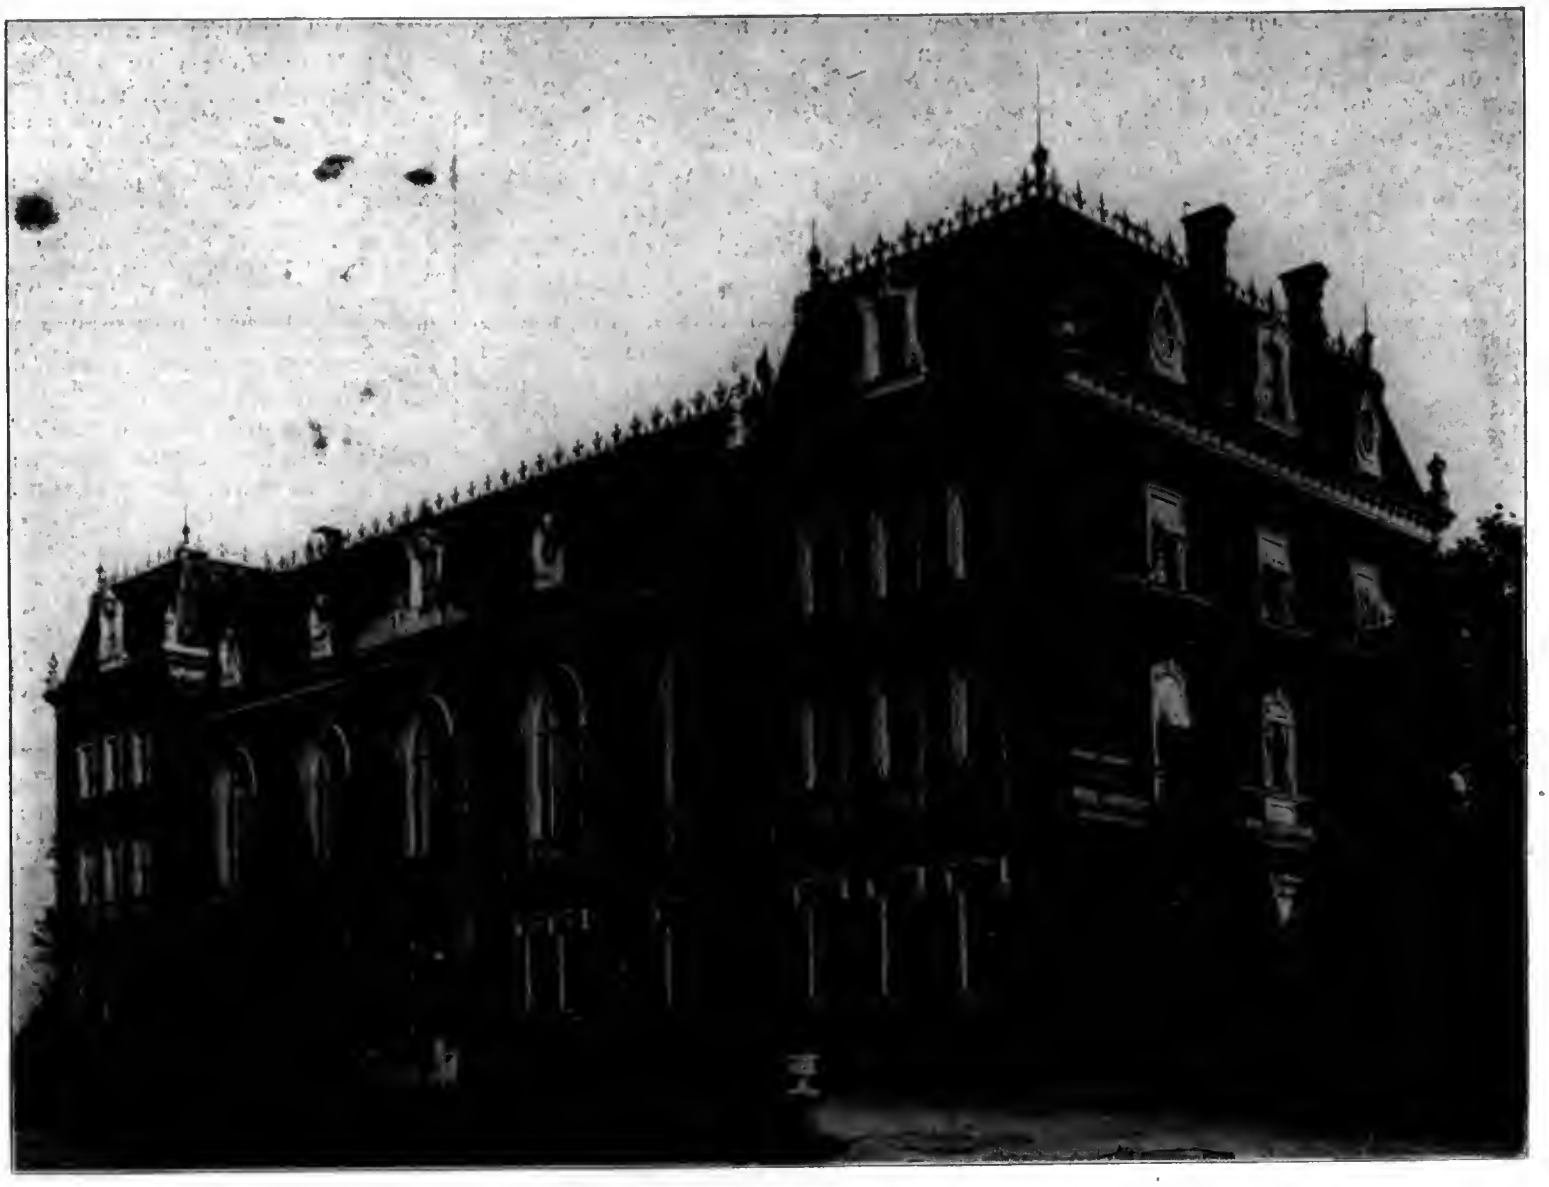
I have been in position to watch from the beginning the efforts to establish "nature study" as a part of our public school curriculum. This teaching, which was taken up but a few years ago in our educational centers, is spreading rapidly, and one can see already some of the results. Not only have the children a better understanding of Nature and her products, but by the methods employed in teaching they come to love the plants which they care for and to appreciate in some degree their value, the laws which govern their growth and the loss entailed by their destruction. Now I believe that when these children come to be men and women we shall see flower lovers more abundant and garden makers more skillful than is generally the case now.

Passing these important broad lines of our work in relation to the public, both as individuals and clubs or societies, I now come to those matters which concern us directly as individual members of our society and as a society.



Organization a Necessity.

At New York City August 21, 1888, President E. G. Hill said:



The formation of florists' clubs at trade centers is of inestimable value to every member of such club, doing away largely with trade jealousies and bringing our profession more prominently before the public. The value and need of association is recognized in all professions and in all lines of trade, and none need it more than we in our profession. Associated effort incites our aspirations, begets fellowship, promotes harmony, destroys ignorance, removes differences, prevents misunderstandings and encourages trade. These are some of the fruits of associating together. Then let us renew our fealty to this organization and seal anew our pledge to extend its usefulness.

This society stands publicly as the official head of North American florists and floral societies. It represents every individual and ought, rightfully, to represent every floral organization. If we do the public work in the present and future that we have done in the past, we may rightfully insist that at least two or more officials from every florists' club and society should also be members of the S. A. F.

If the S. A. F. is to secure uniform inspection laws, adjust postal matters, strive for equitable freight classifications, for fair legislation to the direct and material benefit of all, it must not only have the support of membership fees, which is a trifle to the individual, but it must also have the working support of many members. Florists' clubs and societies should send one or more public-spirited working delegates to our annual meetings, instructed as to the public aid which their club desires from us. The expenses of such delegates should be paid by the club. To secure the best results, these delegates should be present at our directors' winter meeting as well as at the annual session.

Gardeners as Members.

In 1885, at our first meeting in Cincinnati, President John Thorpe said: "There is a great deal of untrodden ground for us to go over yet and where we can do much good, especially among gentlemen's gardeners and amateurs. There are nearly 2,000 gardeners in the employ of gentlemen who are holding positions of trust and responsibility. These gardeners are always well informed, and would be of valuable aid to the society."

At Chicago, in 1887, President Robert Craig said:

> The society has done wisely in not restricting its membership to any class, but has thrown open wide its doors to welcome all friends of the art. Its chief object is to cultivate in the people of America a taste and love for plants and flowers, and it should endeavor to get into its ranks not only all the commercial florists and those engaged in supplying their various wants, but should exert every effort to interest gardeners on public and private grounds. On this class much depends; to them is entrusted a great work in the advancement of horticultural taste, and if it be intelligently done they will, in the growing appreciation of the American public, find due encouragement.

I have read many extracts showing the foresight of our officers along the lines of the growth of this society which we have seen developed, but only in the words quoted from President Thorpe and President Craig do we find even an intimation of the great help coming to our hands from the public and private gardeners. While we have all realized what wheel horses they have always been in most flower shows, we have not been prepared for the enormous increase in their numbers, nor have we realized that because of these increasing numbers, the great importance of their work, and the large expenditures of money under their direction, they must make themselves felt in our various clubs and societies.

I wish to call attention to the fact that many of our strongest gardeners' and florists' clubs today from Massachusetts to California are dominated by live workers from public institutions and private estates. There are among them many who are able and ambitious and whose employers encourage participation in everything that belongs to horticulture.

These brothers of ours are not only strong in clubs in our trade centers, but they are organized in smaller suburban towns where the membership is almost exclusively their own. The Society of American Florists must have their support. They must consider our society their national representative. They must be members and be represented at its meetings. Our annual convention programme must contain matters of vital interest to them. Our auxiliary societies, which are maintained by loyal members of this society, must consider the welfare of these gardeners and provide opportunities for their co-operation in the rose, carnation and chrysanthemum societies.

The question mentioned elsewhere regarding favorable membership rates for club members in good standing must be carefully considered by your committee with relation to these gardeners' clubs. The visits of our officials as suggested elsewhere will be heartily welcomed by those now active and the new ones constantly forming. Knowledge of the management and development of these clubs which our officials can supply will bind the new organizations to us with strong and lasting ties. The necessity of an official representative of our society, whose whole time is thus occupied is best seen in this rapidly developing section of our affairs.

Society Work Between Conventions.

The very life of the society lies in its membership, and recognizing that we are not growing as we should, or in proportion to the growth of horticulture, I offer the following suggestions that seem practical to me and worthy of the consideration of the committee which I believe should be appointed and which should report at an early session.

President Anthony said in 1894:

> The secretary should receive such compensation for his services as would enable him to devote his whole time to the interests of the society. There are innumerable ways in which a paid officer could be of benefit to the society.

We must have more time from one of our executive officers, presumably the secretary, and probably not less than six months of his time, that he may visit once or twice a year by appointment, if possible, all horticultural societies, florists' and gardeners' clubs, nearly all of which this society may rightfully represent in a national way. It is certain that such visits would not only bring to the society a larger fund from increased membership than would cover his additional salary, but further, such visits made in company with other officials, state vice-presidents or members of our board of directors, would result in great good and enthusiasm to the societies themselves.

The secretary could suggest the best method of club work, could explain the forward movement of the S. A. F., on new or old lines, and could keep in close touch with the needs and opinions of the trade. On such occasions our membership could and would be increased.

It being conceded that the greatest possibilities for increase in members and in interest in our society lie in the florists' clubs, I suggest for your consideration that members of these clubs in good standing be admitted to membership in the S. A. F. at a reduced rate, the dues for such local clubs to be remitted by the secretary of these clubs not later than July 1 of each year. Your committee on closer relations at Pittsburg in 1895, Messrs. Esler, Hill and Beatty, recommended that the officials of our society endeavor to arrange for the admission of florists' clubs and members of the Florists' Hail Association to the Society of American Florists by the payment of a certain gross sum which should entitle each member of these clubs and associations to a yearly membership in the society, said sum to be fixed annually. This is in line with my suggestions. It is worthy of your consideration that our society also admit all members in good standing of the carnation, rose, chrysanthemum and other like societies at a reduced rate.

As I believe the leading officials of these kindred societies are present today, our committee to consider these matters might be made large enough to include one of their representatives. Hear what President Wood said in 1900:

Our members should be constantly thoughtful and active for the society in obtaining new members, soliciting every one who trades with them to become a member of the society, following the example set by that distinguished horticulturist, C. M. Hovey, of Boston, when he was trying to extend the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. He and his superintendent and clerks solicited every person who came to his nurseries or greenhouses to become a member of that society. In this manner I became a member at the age of 24.

Practical Education.

This subject has been referred to a number of times in the history of our society and I can only repeat the conclusion that our work should be done through some of the universities already established. The states of New York, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Indiana, Illinois and probably others, contain universities which afford fairly good opportunities for horticultural education.

If the treasury of this society contained a somewhat larger permanent fund, or if some of its well-to-do members would combine and contribute to such a fund, the society might well endow a chair of practical floriculture in some of the already established colleges or universities, or it might provide for practical lectures to be given at certain times during the year at one or all of the above named universities.

I would suggest that should you at this time see fit to appoint a committee to consider the subject of promoting the adoption of a text book on plant life in our primary schools, that this last question can well be left with the same committee.

Something Besides Book Learning.

John N. May said in 1899:

It is a deplorable fact that many graduates from agricultural and horticultural institutions, although well versed in the theory, are lamentably deficient in practical experience.

A vice-president of our society in a great horticultural center, himself a leader, says: "Our business is just at the dawn. Why, we haven't started." He said further: "I am sure you can do nothing better at Washington than try to inspire our young men. Say to them, foundation of success is honor, next patience, do your work well, do it a little better than the other fellow. Know that you can do some one thing, if only one. That is the first requisite. Let the young man be able to say definitely, I can do this."

Of five agricultural college graduates tried by him, all failed. They were bred and trained away from the actual doing of the work. They were trying to direct working men to do that which they themselves could not do well.

Build on Right Lines.

The awakened interest in floriculture means that many customers, and the best ones, are seeking information, the names of flowers and plants, how they grow, their care. You are looked upon as trained horticulturists. Your ability and willingness to supply information help to lay a broad foundation for your business. There are, as you know, some shops bearing florists' signs whose owners handle our produce simply as merchandise, without technical knowledge. They not only cannot tell the customer what he may wish to know, but they purposely mislead or exaggerate. While such misinformation reacts mainly on themselves, the effect is bad for the trade generally. Chemically colored or distorted flowers are also to be avoided. You "magnify your office" by freely yet carefully dispensing this knowledge. You acquire a reputation among business men in your community by your ability to supply this information. Books of reference in horticulture at hand which the customer may look over at a convenient desk are a benefit; books on gardening may be given out. The telling of how to do these things passes on to others and to your credit.

A Field for Women.

President Norton said at Toronto:

We should not forget the ladies! I would recommend they be given an opportunity to enter the business. Their correct taste and their aptitude for recognizing the beautiful in form and color make their services desirable as artists and designers, where harmony of color is so essential. There are many women today throughout the country who are doing a profitable business on their own account, and there is room for many more in an occupation which is so appropriate and pleasant, and for which they are so admirably fitted in refinement and taste.

While quite a percentage of our retail flower stores for many years have been owned or have been actively cared for by women, more recently they have taken up the work of house decoration. This is particularly the case in the Pacific coast cities, where their business is of sufficient importance to require well equipped shops on good streets. There are further good opportunities in horticultural lines for women with business tact who are willing to take the time to equip themselves with a thorough horticultural education. Landscape gardening, for instance, is an almost untried field for women, although there is no good reason why with training they should not make it a successful and lucrative profession.

Tariff Hardships.

The high protective tariff on glass, flowering bulbs and plants has frequently been complained of by many of our members, but without effect, and many of those who have labored hard for relief in former years have finally abandoned the case as hopeless. I am glad to see at this time that help seems to be at hand. The continued enforcement of a high and arbitrary tariff, which in many cases causes annoying and vexatious details for both seller and buyer, together with fines and arbitrarily increased valuations, have borne their natural fruit and various foreign countries are meeting us more than half way with high tariff rates for merchandise which we have been selling liberally abroad. Further, they are placing duties as high as seventy-five per cent against goods received from countries whose known protective tariff is excessive, and are making the duties as low as fifteen per cent when the tariff of such countries is moderate.

This legislation is evidently aimed at the United States, and the Merchants' Association of New York is alive to the dangers threatening our export trade and demands reciprocity treaties which will do justice to all countries.

It would be well for our legislative committee to give all possible aid to such associations, that our own burdens may be lessened.

At Detroit in 1899, Patrick O'Mara, chairman of your legislative committee, recommended that specific duties be asked on plants and bulbs instead of the present system of ad valorem duties. He also recommended that our legislative committee act with the nurserymen in these matters.

Postal Reform.

For our members who print catalogues and mail their wares, and their number and percentage is increasing, this is perhaps the most important national matter affecting us. It seems reasonable that the third and fourth class matter should be combined on a basis of one cent for two ounces. We should have a bulk rate per pound for catalogues without the per ounce weight limit which now compels us to trim each catalogue to exact fraction, with no gain to the government.

Lastly, we should have a trial of the parcels post. Many of those who have given the subject much study and who know its workings, are firm believers in it and it certainly seems well worth while to give it a trial. Each member could write his congressman concerning these reforms and could induce others to write also. We ought to encourage our legislative committee by pledging ourselves at this meeting to give such support. The seedsmen and nurserymen, the agricultural implement association, and other strong national associations are with us. This is the time to act.

State Aid on Experimental Lines.

President Rudd said in 1899:

> We are not as a class receiving from the experiment stations—institutions established and conducted with public funds, and for the public good—those benefits to which we are entitled. For this state of affairs no one is to blame but ourselves. We have neglected to make our wants known in an intelligent manner, and have not accepted gracefully what little work has been done in our behalf.

The state of Illinois expends from $10,000 to $20,000 per year on experimental work in horticulture, most of which has been applied to pomology. Other states are no doubt following the same lines. Our local horticultural societies may rightfully demand appropriations for experimental work in floriculture, or a share of the appropriations already made. The volume of our business and the amount of capital now invested in commercial floriculture entitle us to this consideration. Plant diseases, fertilizing experiments, storage of cut flowers, etc., need careful experimental work.

That Permanent Home.

I do not find that the committee appointed to report on this subject ever reported. If as President Breitmeyer said at St. Louis: "We should keep this idea alive even though its accomplishment be far distant," we should perhaps have a standing committee to have this subject in hand. We can surely do nothing without one.

Arbitration.

In 1898 your society established this department on recommendation of your executive committee. Their duty as stated at that time was to promote amicable adjustment of controversies between members when requested by interested parties to do so. The five members of this committee are to be appointed by the president and approved by the executive committee. If it is still your wish to carry forward this department as shown by your records, probably it should be revived by a motion and a vote.

A Spring Flower Show.

President Gude at Omaha in 1898 said: "You should let your light to shine before men that they may see your good works. If London can produce monthly a great flower exhibition there is no reason why America could not have annually at some great metropolis a flower exposition wherein the whole country could join; and before concluding I trespass this suggestion upon you that steps be taken here at this meeting to carry out this idea."

State Vice-Presidents.

I urge upon state delegations to choose only members for state vice-presidents who are known to be workers in matters of this kind. The empty honor is of little value to him who receives it, while neglect of the society's interests is disastrous.

Our Sports.

The present division of time among the varied interests at the annual convention was brought about, after the most careful consideration. A liberal portion of the available hours has been given to our bowling and gun clubs. We must not disparage these features of our meeting. Those kindly spirits among us who are active in these recreations are generally rich in those elements of human nature which help to make life worth living. But it must be borne in mind that our organization convenes but once a year. Its existence depends on a certain amount of careful deliberation as a body. Questions vital to its advancement are to be decided and to do this we require and must have the careful judgment of our best minds after frank discussion. That ability which can carry forward the various sports and interest our members in them we ask to be devoted also to the public sessions. Men prominent in our affiliated societies, the carnation, the chrysanthemum, the rose, the peony, can aid us in the same way. Then we in turn shall rally and interest ourselves in their gatherings.

Merchandising at the Convention.

The display of plants, florists' requisites, building models, heating and ventilating appliances and of the many articles of merchandise have always been a feature of these conventions and have always paid their way. But many of our commercial brothers, as well as some of our sporting friends, we must admit have not always honored our sessions with their presence or their business counsel, which we need. Now I hold that both those who lead in our recreations and those who solicit the attention of the large gathering of buyers here assembled, are in honor bound to attend these sessions of the society so necessary to carry it forward and without whose successful management there will be neither bowler, nor buyer, nor seller to be found.

For the General Welfare.

I must not close without paying tribute to those earnest and loyal men who have made and held together this body. Never was more patriotic work done in any cause. The locked doors were then opened; the wise lips unsealed; the skilled hand directed the beginners.

These earlier years illustrate the great success possible where all are actuated by a single purpose for the upbuilding of the organization itself. In those years our officials were selected from those who had made record for efficient and disinterested service on behalf of the organization. In more recent years with the broadening of our lines of work, and the increasing number of enterprises which seemed to place personal prestige before the general good of the society, we find apparently less whole-souled effort for the direct benefit of the organization, more inclination to criticism. We do not see the frank and open consultation which we should have on all subjects with a willingness to leave the final settlement to the arbitration of the entire society. This tendency to internal and factional differences, which those who promote them are unwilling to exploit in public before the entire body of our members, is certainly to be regretted and I hope that at this session the voice of the convention will be heard placing loyalty to the society above all personal likes or dislikes, all petty or private schemes.

If there are those among us who deem our present line of work unwise and leading in a wrong direction, let them frankly bring forward such opinions in our sessions, that we may with a full and free interchange of views settle them amicably and be started forward again with that strong impetus of the earlier years of the organization.

The address was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Hill, Craig and Esler.

At the conclusion of the president's paper a large part of those present started for the door but were stopped by Mr. Gude, who announced the reception of the evening and stated that the president and the directors invited all to accept their hospitality at any time at the Rathskeller.

Onee more the erowd started but the president held them in check until a decision could be had on the question of adjournment. It was voted to go on with the work of the society as arranged and most of the men stayed but the ladies sought the outer air.

The report of the secretary was then read, as follows:

Secretary's Report.

The records of your secretary's office disclose a period unusually free from sensational incident in the year that has passed since we turned away from the glories of the great exposition and the allurements of the Pike and said farewell to the brethren of the World's Fair city, whose untiring kindness had been so incessantly manifested during our stay with them. In the absence of more strenuous duties the zeal of your officers has found expression in an earnest effort to promote widespread interest in this convention and exhibition and bring out the largest possible attendance from all quarters.

The usual executive board meeting was held last April in this city. The program which you have before you, differing in some degree from the type of those arranged for past conventions, was the outcome of a feeling that it would be wise to give attention at this time to topics of broad horticultural interest and to avail ourselves of the advantages presented in the co-operation of the U. S. Department of Agriculture so freely proffered by its able and courteous officials. One new feature which has excited much interest is the prize essay competition, on which a report will be presented by the judges at the morning session of Wednesday.

The problem of how to increase our numerical strength has wisely been given prominence of late. Even at the risk of appearing to overlook fundamental requisites your secretary has long since become disciplined to the idea, that the best evidence of health and prosperity for the society is found in the length of the membership list and the size of the treasurer's balance, and that whatever contributes to the attainment of this condition is an asset, that must not be despised. In considering this vital question of membership a recapitulation of some of the secretary's records may prove both interesting and enlightening.

At the convention of 1889, at Buffalo, the first year in which the $3.00 annual assessment went into operation, we find that the number of members who paid for that year was 827. For 1890, the year of the Boston meeting, the number was 926. In 1891, Toronto, the figure dropped to 827; in 1892, Washington, it was 829; in 1893, St. Louis, 685; in 1894, Atlantic City, 617; in 1895, Pittsburg, 547; in 1896, Cleveland, 551; in 1897, Providence, 524; in 1898, Omaha, 436; in 1899, Detroit, 535; in 1900, New York, 719; in 1901, Buffalo, 739; in 1902, Asheville, 639; in 1903, Milwaukee, 745; in 1904, St. Louis, 711. These figures are inclusive of life membership.

The printed list published each fall should not be taken as an index of the number of members in good standing for the year the list is issued. It is true that the by-laws stipulate that dues shall be paid in advance but it has been customary to carry on the roll until the end of the year, the names of all members in good standing up to January 1 of that year and crossing off on December 31 the names of all those who have failed to qualify during the year. The percentage of lapse in recent years is about 15 per cent from each annual list. Not all these members are permanently lost, however, for there are many who choose a fluctuating allegiance, paying the $5.00 initiation fee in those years when they find it convenient to attend the convention. Broadly it may be said that our membership swells when we hold meetings in the populous centers, shrinks when we select locations smaller or more remote from those centers, and fluctuates as to its sectional preponderance in accordance with our movements, a series of meetings in one section building up the list locally at the expense of the section neglected; and this will always be true regardless of what we may say or do.

Of the 783 annual members whose names appeared on the printed list of 1904, 155 failed to meet obligations as to dues for that year, consequently, on January 1 their names were stricken from the roll. It may be of assistance in the consideration of ways and means for enlarging our permanent membership to know the localities in which these lapses occurred. The loss is divided among the states as follows: Alabama, California, District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Texas, one each; North Carolina, two; Connecticut, Maryland, two each; Kentucky, Missouri, three each; Massachusetts, four; New Jersey, five; Iowa, seven; Minnesota, eight; Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, fifteen each; Michigan, sixteen; Ohio, nineteen; Illinois, New York, twenty-two each. Offset against the additions in these respective states we find the net result for the year 1904 to be as follows: Net gain, Alabama, California, Tennessee, West Virginia, Oklahoma, one each; South Carolina, Texas, Manitoba, two each; Colorado, Kansas, Illinois, three each; Indiana, four; District of Columbia, six; Connecticut, eight; Missouri, twenty. Net loss, Georgia, Kentucky, Nebraska, New Hampshire, one each; Massachusetts, North Carolina, two each; New Jersey, Ohio, four each; Minnesota, five; Pennsylvania, six; Iowa, Michigan, seven each; New York, nine; Wisconsin, thirteen. Net gain by states, fifty-eight. Net loss by states, sixty-three, giving a net loss to the S. A. F. of five. Conclusions from these figures should, however, be modified by the fact that a few fluctuations are caused by removals from one state to another, also that a few of those members reported as having lapsed last year are liable to insist on paying all arrearages at this meeting.

With the security of a charter and the foundation of a substantial permanent fund, with the support of the most enterprising horticultural firms assured through the instrumentality of the registration department, with the co-operation of the dealers as shown in the splendid exhibitions of recent years and the loyalty of the younger element secured by the recognition of their games and sports at our annual meetings it would seem that now is a good time for a big concerted effort to build up our membership list, and thus make the twenty-first year of the society's existence a banner year in its history.

serymen's Association, were present to confer with the S. A. F. committee on legislation, and the society adjourned.

President's Reception.

The first of the social features of the convention was the reception to President Vaughan. It was held on a brilliantly illuminated lawn and was a distinct innovation and a most decided success upon which the Washington Florists' Club is to be congratulated. The usual reception feature was retained with music and light refreshments, in addition to which there was a barbecue, an ox being roasted over an open fire and served in a fashion new to nearly all and pleasing to everyone. Over a thousand guests were taken to and from the grounds in special cars.

Ladies' Reception and Drive.

The ladies to the number of several hundred, for there were many more in attendance than ever before, were tendered a reception by Mrs. Freeman, wife of the vice-president, on Wednesday afternon. A splendid collation was served in the handsomely decorated store, followed by a carriage ride to Rock Creek and through the many beautiful residence streets of the city. They manifested their appreciation of Mrs. Freeman's hospitality by presenting her with a silver loving cup.

Wednesday's Proceedings.

Wednesday morning was cool and comfortable, there was a large attendance and the real work of the convention was taken up with vim. A communication from H. P. Kelsey was presented dealing with parcels post and commissions to gardeners. Referred to a committee consisting of Frank R. Pierson, J. A. Valentine and Benj. Hammond to act with committees from the Seed and Nursery Associations.

H. A. Dreer, Inc., presented a communication covering the recent action of the classification committee in advancing freights on plants in pots to one and one-half times first class. Referred to J. D. Eisele, F. R. Pierson and Patrick O'Mara to take up with the classification authority.

The matter of affiliating with the National Council of Horticulture was referred to Alex. Wallace, Philip Breitmeyer and Wm. Scott, to be known as the Organization Committee.

Greetings were ordered sent to Wm. R. Smith, Edgar Sanders and the members quarantined at New Orleans, Harry Papworth being the only one present.

F. R. Pierson brought up the matter of a badge book as means of identifying members. It was voted to try it next year.

A communication from the Gardeners' Club, of Boston, relating to closer relations caused animated debate. Referred to the committees on organization and president's address, with A. Herrington and I. L. Powell added.

The judges of the essays in competition for the Beatty prizes announced that of the twenty-three those of S. S. Skidelsky, Henry Eichholz and J. Austin Shaw were the best in order named. The title in every case was "The Ideal Employer."

Wednesday Evening.

Following Miss Sipe's address the question box was opened. Lonsdale, Bisset, Hallock and others recommended summer bedding plants deserving more general use. Of Nicotiana Sanderae E. G. Hill said it was variously estimated in Europe but not likely to be in large demand. J. A. Freeman said he had found it a weed only and advised not wasting time on it.

On the question of caring for carnation blooms between cutting and marketing, Peter Fisher said to keep them in a cool, airy place but by all means avoid the use of ice. Others commended his advice.

Thursday's Proceedings.

Thursday was another beautiful cool day and one of the most important in the society's history. The joint committee on president's address and organization reported, paying tribute to the evidences of deep thought in the address and made these recommendations: That a committee be appointed to act in the matter of the national council of horticulture; that every gardeners' or trade society be invited to send one delegate to each convention without payment of fees; that private gardeners be given representation on the executive board; that permanent committee on legislation and arbitration be appointed. It was given as the opinion of the committee that a great public spring exhibition would add immeasurably to the strength of the society.

E. G. Hill spoke strongly in favor of such an exhibition as the national ones of England and France. Robert Craig urged such a show as a method of bringing together all our trade societies. After prolonged and animated discussion J. A. Valentine offered a resolution for a committee consisting of the president, Messrs. Hill, Craig, Montgomery and Fisher be appointed with power to add to its number to take up and proceed with the show in the society's name with full power to decide when, where and how it shall be held.

The resolution was adopted and the president at once added Messrs. Herrington, Pierson and Herr to the committee. He then asked Vice-President Freeman to take the chair and the committee retired for deliberation. At the evening session they recommended that the first national spring show be held in Boston in March, 1906, provided a guarantee fund of $10,000 is raised and that in 1907 the show be held in Chicago.

The other recommendations of the committee on president's address were adopted. The committee on joint action with the seed and nursery associations was given power to make such expenditures as are necessary to prosecute the work. A committee consisting of Hallock, Wallace and Hammond was appointed to consider the subject of a horticultural text book for schools.

The papers of S. S. Skidelsky and R. Nicholson, the latter on "Floriculture in the South," were read.

Superintendent Cooke reported on the trade exhibit.

Until the judges of election were ready to report, there was desultory discussion of subjects from the question box.

The Election.

The election resulted as follows: For president, W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, 156 votes; H. B. Beatty, 85; Lewis Ullrich, 47. For vice-president, H. M. Altick, 211. For secretary, W. J. Stewart, 211; E. A. Seidewitz, 74. For treasurer, James Dean, 136; Wm. Scott, 112; C. B. Whitnall, 21. As a majority is necessary to an election the chair declared no election for the office of treasurer and ordered a new ballot. He invited an appeal from his decision which Mr. Esler made and on motion it was decided that Mr. Beatty hold the office of treasurer for another year.

Thursday afternoon there was the shooting contest, and the ladies' bowling followed a trolley ride in the morning and luncheon at the congressional library. In the evening Oglesby Paul, of Philadelphia, lectured, followed by the closing business session.

On Friday the society is to be entertained in Washington in the morning and in Baltimore in the afternoon.

Kindred Societies.

On Wednesday evening the Carnation Society held a meeting to frame up by-laws for adoption at the Boston meeting.

On Thursday afternoon the executive committee of the Rose Society held a meeting to plan the work for Boston show in connection with the national one, the S. A. F. plans to hold at the same time. On Thursday afternoon the Hail Association listened to a very satisfactory report and re-elected officers.

Bowling Tournament.

The Rathskeller alleys were the best the S. A. F. bowlers ever had for their great annual tournament. Ten cities participated; good rolling was the rule; the contest was close and excitement ran high. When the din subsided it was found that Philadelphia had emerged a victor, winning by a narrow margin from Washington. Philadelphia gets the Beatty and Kasting cups for a year. Beneke, of St. Louis, was the high man with the excellent score of 597. The full score follows:

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Everybody talked convention last week and this subject was of such general interest that the unfavorable weather and depressing market conditions were almost forgotten. It was a midsummer week in every sense of the word. Heat, humidity, storms, tremendous gladioli shipments, rivers of asters and enough waste to keep any store supplied with cut flowers for a year. Of asters especially there is no end. It would not be fair to quote prices.

New roses are abundant and their quality in most cases may be judged by the 25 cents per hundred quotation. Carnations, valley and orchids are scarce and values are maintained.

A better condition is now anticipated and September will see a good beginning of what is expected to be the greatest season in the retail business New York has ever experienced.

All the stores in the wholesale quarter have been greatly improved. With hardly an exception new paint and paper, and a general overhauling show which way the wind blows. There is no lack of enterprise and there are all the indications of a strenuous season, with so many new and old houses bidding for the confidence of growers and adding so largely to their facilities and conveniences.

The great fire which destroyed the D. L. & W. depot in Jersey City was of special interest to florists in delays occasioned in the receiving of shipments and the delivery of flowers to outgoing steamers.

Louis Dupuy, of Whitestone, is back from his European trip.

A. L. Miller, of Jamaica avenue, Brooklyn, has the sympathy of all in the loss of his mother.

Hon. J. S. Larke, Canadian consul at Sidney, Australia, was in the city last week on his way to a visit with old friends in Canada. He is known to New York floriculture as an extensive shipper of kentia seeds from New South Wales to this country.

New York to Washington.

The New York delegation to the convention, reinforced by two dozen of the Boston "faithful," making a total of about 120, left by special train via the Pennsylvania railroad at 10:55 Monday morning. The day dawned clear and cool and the crowd seemed to partake of the harmonious influence of the ideal weather. A more delightful reunion has never characterized the start of a convention from the New York standpoint.

Many of the exhibitors had preceded the special so that considerably over 100 New Yorkers, according to prophecy, practically demonstrated their interest in the success of the national society. Several prospective officers were on board and a good deal of good natured discussion occurred on the way with some real electioneering concerning which, Wednesday may have more to say. The special carried none but floriculturists, as guaranteed, and they certainly owned the train. The dining car was in good hands, with J. B. Nugent, Jr., generalissimo, and Joe Manda, Joe Fenrich and Bobby Schultz as lieutenant-generals. Charles Weathered proved an able aide-de-camp and wielded the sword with skill. A more generous supply of everything and the best of everything in fowl, fruit and ice cream with all that goes therewith, including fluid extracts that appealed to the most orthodox taste and to the palate of the Scottish veterans.

President Traendly was here, there and everywhere looking after the comfort of the guests and members of the club and making everybody feel at home. Many of the old standbys were missing, but several veterans attended. Samuel Henshaw was back from his summer in England several years younger than in 1904. James Dean and family from Freeport were on hand. Messrs. Montgomery and Elliott, with twenty-five other Bostonese voted the New York Club the kind of hosts one reads about. The visitors were loud in appreciation of their welcome. A "Nugent punch" on tap vied, some declared, with the famous Westcott brew.

The bulb trade was happily represented by Mrs. H. H. Berger and Mr. Hageman. August Rhotert and wife upheld the nursery interests. Madison sent a handsome delegation, or quartette, in Herrington, Totty, Shannon and Schultz. Mr. Herrington's brother William, from Sussex County, England, head master of the schools there, came along. Brooklyn was ably represented. Flatbush donated Louis Schmutz, Sr., and wife. John Scott was there, telling of the big plant he will have next year when his new range of 100x160 is completed and his whole Keap street place in addition transferred to his present headquarters. Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Pomell and son, of Millbrook, and Mr. Russell, made a fine delegation of the gardening fraternity from the Poughkeepsie section. Mr. Weber, of Lynbrook, was steeped in Victory. Mr. and Mrs. Guttman were among the happiest on board. Will Siebrecht is bringing up his boys in the way they should go. He had two of them with him. Patten and Fisher, the carnation kings from the east, were contented members of the family. Phil. Kessler and wife brought the prize baby along, the only two-year-old on the train, though several seemed to feel like two-year-olds before the journey ended. The hail man and rubber man were much in evidence. F. R. Pierson ably represented the claims of Elegantissima. Dairs, of Orange, De La Mare, Pepper and Wallace with the writer, made up the newspaper contingent. Gaedeke was there from New Hampshire and John Birnie and John Donaldson, with their families, ably stood for the land of the heather.

H. J. Smith, of Hinsdale, Mass., and Wood, of Providence, R. I., were among the visitors. Washington was reached at 5, in ample time for securing rooms and preparation for the evening greetings. The reception committee at Washington was at the train with earnest welcome and all seemed enthused and hopeful as to the success of the convention. The halls seem crowded and everybody is busy completing the setting of the exhibits.

Bowling is indulged in by the visitors in preparation for the big match on Wednesday and the New York club will be selected tonight from the averages made. The weather is delightfully cool this evening and if the boys will continue it through the week everybody will be more than satisfied. Especially are the Washingtonians praying for the full moon's influence in behalf of a nice evening tomorrow for the reception. A fine rainstorm is laying the dust and cooling the temperature as this letter starts for the west. I predict one of the greatest conventions in the society's history.

J. Austin Shaw.

"WATCH US GROW."

The phrase so well known through continuous advertising, "Watch Us Grow," was largely used by M. Rice & Co. at the convention. Nearly all their signs had some kind of a watch attached and their souvenir was the Japanese water flower, which when put in water grows and flowers while you watch it; in fact, it grows almost as fast as the Rice business has grown in the last few years.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Rather quiet conditions have prevailed during the past week. The roses coming in are just about sufficient to go around without much change in prices. Carnations are rather scarce. The best are now from outdoors, although some very nice Fair Maid grown inside is arriving. Prices on these are higher, good stock has brought $1.50 to $3, some poor grades as low as 75 cents, the latter being very small. Sweet peas are not especially good, 15 cents to 20 cents being average prices. Asters are in very heavy supply and the quality extra good. Prices have slumped heavily, few going beyond 50 cents and many as low as 25 cents. Good light gladioli have sold as high as $8, less desirable colors down to $2 and $3. Green stock remains about the same. Quality is very good at present.

Exhibition.

Annuals were the principal feature of the exhibition on August 12. Large collections of these came from Mrs. J. L. Gardner, W. Thatcher, gardener, and Mrs. E. M. Gill, who won in order named. Robert Cameron, from the Harvard Botanic Gardens, showed (not for competition) a very extensive collection of annuals, finely staged, also a large table of perennials. Blue Hill Nurseries had a fine collection of phloxes, which included some very good seedlings. Mrs. L. M. Towle and W. G. Winsor had tables of dahlias, the former showing many excellent seedlings. Joseph Thorpe had a collection of asters and sweet peas and Mrs. E. M. Gill a general display.

Fruits and vegetables were well shown, plums, peaches and pears being very good. In the vegetable classes the collection of endive from W. J. Clemson, J. O. Christensen, gardener, was very fine. The judging in this section seemed to be more satisfactory than usual.

Gladioli will be the star feature at the exhibition on August 19. John Lewis Childs and others will make large exhibits.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the herbaceous garden of Robert Roulston, Roxbury, on August 14 and found a very interesting old-fashioned garden.

A. F. Estabrook, president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, will entertain the officers and some other members of the society at his summer residence in Swampscott on August 17. A special train has been chartered by Mr. Estabrook to convey his guests to and from the North Union station.

Various Notes.

A meeting of members of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club was held at Horticultural Hall on August 12 to consider S. A. F. and O. H. matters. Commercial growers and private gardeners were equally represented and all present had something to say during the meeting, which lasted two hours in spite of the sweltering heat. Among the speakers were James Wheeler, W. H. Elliott, Wm. Nicholson, K. Finlayson, W. A. Riggs, Alex Montgomery, A. H. Fewkes, D. Finlayson, W. P. Rich and W. N. Craig.

The unanimous opinion was that a new title for the S. A. F. was very necessary. The caudal appendage was a misnomer and would never attract gardeners, as it had been hoped. A new title which found acceptance was that of the "American Horticultural Society." The fact that private gardeners were debarred from the list of subscribers of certain trade papers until recently was commented on and it was the opinion of those present that a private gardener should be kept on the executive board always, also that this latter board should be elected and not appointed.

A good deal of emphasis was lain on the fact that the S. A. F., owing to a short-sighted policy had allowed the carnation, rose, and other organizations to form independent bodies when they all should have been under the wing of the parent society. It was hoped an amalgamation on terms agreeable to all might yet be effected, as it would strengthen all concerned.

These were some of the ideas brought out and we hope a portion of them may be adopted ere long. There is no reason why Massachusetts alone should not have 500 members instead of a paltry fifty as at present. The fact that this state has merely one-fourth the membership it had fifteen years ago in spite of the great increase in commercial and private establishments would seem to show there was something radically wrong in the way the S. A. F. is managed. If it does not wish to become a mere trade organization for social gatherings, sightseeing and the transaction of such business as the various dealers in horticultural commodities can effect, some such changes ought to be made.

A largely attended meeting of stallholders in the Music Hall Market was held on August 12 to consider the advisability to letting stalls to those outside the state of Massachusetts. After considerable discussion it was voted to make the market open to all growers in the United States. This, it is believed, will result in a number of growers from outside the state coming in.

T. F. Galvin reports August trade as quite good. Their business last June was the heaviest on record.

Farquhar & Co. have work well advanced on new storage sheds for trees and shrubs at their Roslindale Nurseries.

Mrs. E. M. Gill, of Medford, had the misfortune to fall and sprain her left shoulder a few days ago. We are glad she is improving satisfactorily.

The Boston convention delegates, while less numerous than at the last Washington meeting, made quite a good sized party. The intense heat we experienced for several days ere their departure, accompanied by excessive humidity, made some stay at home who would probably have gone had it been cooler.

H. Waldecker sailed for Europe on the La Touraine on August 10.

S. J. Goddard has taken a trip to Nova Scotia and we hope will be greatly benefited thereby.

Alex Deevar, of Farquhar & Co.'s seed department, has gone to Maine for his vacation.

William Nicholson finished housing his carnations this week. He reports Fiancee, After Glow and Aristocrat as all looking well. His outdoor blooming plants are a mass of flower at present. The Queen is the leader. Eldorado, Harlowarden, Floriana and Wm. Scott are also good.

John Barr reports a big demand for field-grown stock of the Queen carnation. He also finds Harry Fenn a phenomenal seller.

Red spider has been very bad on outdoor grown carnations and violets this season. This is not surprising when the heat and droughty conditions are remembered.

Entries are already being received for the big fall show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, which opens on September 14.

The principal flowers seen in the store windows these hot days are gladioli, sweet peas, Lilium speciosum, asters and aquatics.

"Mum" will soon be the word. Some of the early sorts are already showing color. In spite of low prevailing prices of the last two or three seasons as many as ever are being grown.

William Spillsbury has bought material for a new house 34x100, to be used for early cucumbers and later for violets.

Frederick C. Moseley, secretary of the A. T. Stearns Lumber Co., was struck and instantly killed by an express train at Neponset station on August 9. The deceased was forty-seven years of age and had been identified with the firm for about twenty years. Mr. Moseley was widely and favorably known among florists, with whom his firm has large dealings, and general regret is felt at his sudden and untimely end. Interment, after cremation, was at Forest Hill Cemetery, on August 12.

After you have finished planting the carnation beds in your houses you may have many good plants left in the field. They need not be a loss to you as there are several ways in which you can get some money out of them. If they are good varieties that are largely grown there is sure to be a demand for them. Some of your neighbors may be short of just those varieties and glad to get them, or some of the growers in nearby cities may want them. If you can't sell the plants it will pay you to give them a little care such as keeping the weeds down and loosen the soil occasionally and they will give you a nice lot of blooms during September and October, when your plants inside are not doing very much. These blooms, while they are not high grade, will help you out of many a tight place when other flowers are scarce, and they always are scarce after the early frosts which do not hurt the carnations.

If your climate is not too severe you can plant a lot into cold frames and by covering the glass and banking the sides with manure during the coldest weather you can winter them nicely and they will give you a fine lot of blooms late next spring. In the latter case I would advise you not to wait until freezing weather before planting them into the cold frames. They will winter much better and withstand more cold if the plants are re-established in their new quarters.

If you ship any of your plants even a short distance you will do well to observe a few rules which will be found necessary if you want your plants to travel in good condition. As in transplanting, moisture is very necessary, but it can easily be overdone. When digging the plants to ship, it is necessary to dip the roots in order to keep the plants fresh. Here conditions differ from when you are planting your own houses. These plants you ship will be out of the soil from one to three or four days and the roots must be kept moist during that time. Most growers ship without any soil clinging to the roots unless ordered otherwise.

Packing for Shipment.

In packing them use medium-size boxes, according to the size of the order, but a good size is about 18x48x12; shoe boxes answer the purpose admirably. Let the bottom five inches be solid, then a crack of two inches and a five-inch strip at the top. This crack along the side will come right along the stems of the plants and will allow fresh air to pass through, which will prevent heating, besides keeping the stems comparatively dry. First spread a layer of wet sphagnum over the bottom of the box, then tip up one end of the box so the plants will lay against the lower end. Spread a little wet sphagnum on the lower end to reach up as high as the roots will come. Lay or rather stand a double row of plants against the end of the box and spread another layer of sphagnum against the roots, after which put in another double layer of plants. Don't pack the wet sphagnum between the stems nor the foliage, but keep it down among the roots.

About every six rows of plants put in a layer of excelsior; this will help to keep the plants from heating. Proceed thus until your box is full and finish with sphagnum at the end. Pack your plants into the box firmly so they can not shake loose. If the boxes will be handled much put one or two cleats across just above the roots. Don't put on a solid top but rather lay some paper over the plants and nail strips across the top, then you will be sure the box will remain right side up. Nail handles on the ends and you will find that your boxes will be carried instead of rolled, as is often done by the expressmen.

Besides tacking on your shipping tag you should have an oil crayon and write the address on the box as sometimes the paper tags get torn. Be sure you label each kind plainly and if there is more than one box of one kind, unless you are shipping only one variety, be sure you label each box. Of course you know what is in each box but the man at the other end knows only what the labels tell him, and many times mixtures are caused by carelessness in labeling. Partition off the different varieties so they will keep them separate. Good, heavy paper is as good as anything for that. A good idea is to enclose an invoice with each shipment, then the one who unpacks them will know what to look for.

After packing up the order get it started on its way just as soon as you can. The less delay the better for the plants. Notify your customer by mail when you ship the plants, then he will be looking for them and they won't lay at the express office a day or so before the agent notifies him of the arrival of the boxes, etc. In fact do everything you can to make their journey just as short as possible. A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Cultural Hints.

As the plants show signs of establishment in their new quarters, the shading should be gradually removed, the supply of air increased and syringing discontinued except at intervals of a week or more according to weather.

Topping.

You will notice some varieties very much disposed to run into bud with short stem. These should be allowed to develop to about half size then cut as if it were a bloom. Do not allow any flowers to mature thus early; it is a waste not only of raw material but is a drain on the resources of the plant. Plan to go over the beds twice a week removing not more than two buds from a plant at a time; later once a week will be sufficient and as circumstances warrant the operation should cease. Topping as explained above tends to favor the continuous blooming quality.

As the buds are cut, gather and remove from the house. Do not allow them to remain on the soil or cover them thus thinking to return this much to the soil.

Stem and Dry-Rot.

Watch closely for stem-rot and remove affected plants forthwith, also quite a quantity of the soil in close proximity, leaving the excavation made open to the sun and air for a week or two.

Plants showing signs of dry-rot had best be got rid of at once; there is no known remedy, therefore it is of no use to give them valuable room. Cutting away affected branches will avail nothing, the whole plant will go in a short time.

Should rust appear, do not become alarmed. With good culture the plants will outgrow it. This disease is not now considered a dangerous affection, in fact, as only sorts of merit are affected it seems a sign of high breeding. Removal of affected leaves and weekly applications of Grape Dust to destroy the rust mites is advised.

As soon as plants are well under way a thorough fumigation should be made to discourage aphides. These pests are the primary cause of a multitude of evils.

Supports had best be left off for some time yet to allow easy access to soil and plants, for not only should the surface of the soil be kept open but there probably will be some dead foliage to be removed sooner or later.

Geo. S. Osborn.

TROUBLE WITH BEAUTIES.

I have recently been appointed manager of a greenhouse plant containing 120,000 feet of glass. I have been foreman for several years and am aiming to educate myself in this business. I have six rose houses, 22x150, all others carnations, mums and other stock for retail trade. Five of the rose houses are built in one section, one rose house by itself. This last is planted with Beauties. They were planted before I arrived to take charge. This house has a brick wall three feet high, built seven years ago. Between the wall and gutter are three and one-half feet of glass. This house, as I understand, had been planted with Beauties last year, but not successfully. Over half of the old plants had been replanted to the middle benches and somehow they were ruined, which I noticed in a short time. The side benches, planted with young stock, were full of mildew and spiders, which, of course, were removed in no time, but the mildew checked the young plants, though in two weeks after planting they began to break and by July 18 I found them all healthy and strong. The old plants died off and every week I was compelled to replant until by this time I find only eighty-three old plants left out of 1,360.

The soil outside is just as high as the brick wall and until July 21 I had the side ventilation open. July 20 I found some old and young plants being troubled with black-spot and I closed the side ventilation immediately. Black-spot increased and will ruin the whole house if I do not find the right method to check it. Syringing has been done after noon, watering the same as I am used to at well-known places where Beauties are grown in quantity. The strong growth of the plants showed right treatment. Ventilation was left open day and night, as the dry nights in this section allowed me to do so, only during rain halfway closed. The rafters are not very tight and some rain will find its way on the beds, the same as under the gutter. As the beds come right up to the wall, some rain from the rafters and gutters will find its way to the bed, almost always up to two rows.

I have kept the walks as dry as I possibly could, used slaked lime on the plants like sulphur, also used sulphur and lime mixed at night. No firing has yet been done, as I found it unnecessary in my estimation. I have often been troubled with some black-spot at this time of the year, but as soon as it was picked off it seemed to disappear until January.

The soil is mixed with some cow manure. In the connected range I have about 2,400 two-year-old Beauties, started from July 5 to 7, and they are all looking well. They had some black-spot on the old leaves, but after they were picked no signs were seen of this disease. These plants are receiving the same treatment, but no brick walls are around these houses.

F. H. Kramer.
(Chairman of Entertainment Committee.)

Is it asking too much when I ask you to give me your opinion on this subject? I have explained the subject as well as I can in short words and hope you will understand me.

The brick wall can have nothing to do with the poor health of the old Beauties, but the soil, being banked up against it, will have a tendency to keep it damp and create moisture in the house and may, in a measure, account for the black-spot. Side ventilation, by causing a draught in the houses, will also reduce the vitality of the plants and make them an easy prey to either black-spot or mildew.

The questioner omitted to state whether his benches were raised or solid and, as this is one of the most important factors when carrying over old Beauties, it must be taken into account. The poisonous salts which accumulate in the soil from last season's feeding and find a lodgment in the drainage or subsoil in solid benches, are hard to get rid of unless the plants are lifted and the old soil removed, and cause a deal of damage when the feeding roots dip into this unsuitable food. If the benches are of the raised kind it is easier to remove all the soil, clean the benches and renew the soil.

Seeing that the houses are not entirely waterproof it would be advisable to have the roofs gone over with Mastica or Old English putty and use a little firing during damp weather to dry up the moisture.

The use of sulphur and lime should, other conditions being favorable, have helped to check the black-spot. Cleanliness also is a good preventive.

The following mixture is often used with good results when other measures have failed: Five ounces of the carbonate of copper (cupram) to three quarts of ammonia and sixty gallons of water. Use a very fine spray and see that every part of the foliage is washed. This should be done once a week for at least a month.

Pick off all infected leaves and burn them, keep the surface of the soil clean and well stirred, and do not attempt any kind of feeding until the plants have regained their health. Keep the soil rather on the dry side. Be careful of ventilation, both night and day, and guard against any sudden fluctuation of temperature and no doubt but in a short time conditions will improve.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Buds.

We have now arrived at a most important period and that is the period for selecting the buds. While these notes may not apply to any great extent to the commercial growers, most of whom plant late and take the September bud, the exhibition grower and the man who wants the very finest flowers must catch an August crown bud on the greater part of the varieties now in cultivation. There are a few kinds that should be taken later, which we will enumerate, but after August 20 I take every bud that shows and have always found it safe to do so.

The difference between the buds and the question which is the proper one to take afford the great stumbling block to the majority of beginners and I will briefly explain so far as I can the difference in the buds.

There are two kinds of buds produced by the mum, known respectively as crowns and terminal.

When plants, after being set out on the benches in May, have made a foot or so of growth they produce a bud some time in June. This is called a "break" by many growers, but is in reality a crown bud. Only by reason of its being produced too early it is useless to retain this bud for flowering purposes. The plant will grow along and some time in July will produce another bud, which, like the first one, is still too early to retain. These buds are sometimes known as first and second crowns. The advice sometimes given in catalogues to take first or second crown buds is misleading because the time of the production of the bud is governed by the time the plant is set out on the bench and permitted to grow. Very early planted stock may produce a first bud in May and a second one in July, which is obviously too early to retain, so that advice to take first or second crowns is not very explicit.

All buds produced in August are crown buds and a crown bud, by the way, is always distinguished by the shoots that appear around it and which soon grow up and take all the strength away from the bud if they are not removed. The terminal bud, which does not appear till September or later, always has a cluster of smaller buds around it in place of the small shoots, and this bud being produced some four weeks later than the crown bud will not produce so large a flower or so deep a flower, because it has had another growth to mature, while the crown bud has been putting that same strength to producing petals in the future flower.

Some varieties, while producing magnificent examples of bloom from the crown bud, are not of much account on the later bud, and this makes a proper selection of bud the "paramount issue" in their case. Conspicuous examples of this kind are William Duckham, Cheltoni, Nellie Pockett, Mary Inglis and Donald McLeod, and practically all the Australian varieties should be taken on the crown bud.

It often happens that a plant has buds showing by, say, the end of the first week in August, a date that is really too early to take the bud and yet if that bud is rubbed off and the plant allowed to make another growth the next bud would not be produced until September, too late for a first-class flower. This early bud can be held in suspense a week or more by allowing one or two of the shoots surrounding it to make several leaves and removing them gradually one by one. This diverts the flow of sap from the bud somewhat and a bud so treated will come out all right, where otherwise it might have been rough, misshapen and useless.

Varieties that I would not recommend to be taken before September are S. T. Wright, Col. Appleton, Queen Alexandra or any variety that is being grown for late flowers, such as Maud Dean, Chadwick or W. S. Allen.

The buds of most of the early kinds may be taken after the first week in August. This would include Fitzwygram, Bergmann, Merstham Yellow, Alice Byron and Merry Monarch. Glory of the Pacific makes a poorly colored flower if taken before the 20th and Mrs. Robinson must not be taken before that date.

Just about the time that buds are being produced feeding should not be carried on. Keep your plants quiet until the change is completed and the bud is commencing to swell.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

HORTICULTURE IN SCHOOLS.

[A lecture by Miss Susan B. Sipe, instructor in botany in Normal School No. 1, at Washington, before the Society of American Florists, August 16, 1905.]

Statistics taken in the training school for teachers in the District of Columbia show that two-thirds of the students have never put a seed into the ground. But few of the students have any idea of the preparation of the soil for ordinary garden making. One young girl attempted to dig her garden three feet in depth with a trowel to prepare a bed for coreopsis seed. The lack of general information about our commonest vegetables and flowers is appalling. One student in the present class did not know peas when she saw the pods on the vines. The zinnia, the cockscomb, the pink, the scarlet sage are but masses of flowers to most of the students, and nothing more. And these students will be teachers in our public schools next year!

Training of our public school teachers in elementary gardening is a necessity if we are to reach the children. Realizing this fact, the Department of Agriculture, through the Bureau of Plant Industry, is urging the establishment of elementary courses in horticulture and agriculture in all normal schools. It is using the two normal schools in Washington to demonstrate its ideas.

The work has grown much beyond the original scope. At first an expert was sent to the schools to lecture to the students on practical subjects relating to gardens, in a plain and simple manner, so that what they learned could be applied in their own gardens. Every student was required, and is still required, to have a garden at home. Where there is not sufficient land, window gardening is required. As these home gardens are legitimate school work they must be inspected. In all 175 students have taken the course since its establishment. All of them have had home gardens and all gardens have been visited by the instructor in charge. This work is very valuable in a teacher's training. The garden can be studied through to its full fruit. Usually so much pleasure is derived from it that the young teacher is anxious to have the children under her charge have the same pleasure. She acquires information enough to enable her to start the children in the right way. In all there is nothing so helpful to a teacher as garden work at her own home.

The growth of the work necessitated the doing away with the lectures after the first year. A greenhouse was assigned the school, where plant propagation could be carried on and plant life studied. Immediately the school became the source of supply for plants for school ground decoration and for the beautifying of school-rooms in winter. A larger greenhouse, this last winter, has afforded facilities for experimental work, so that the students are receiving a substantial course in processes of plant life, in effect of water and fertilizer on soils and in planning gardens for simple landscape effects. This is having a noticeable effect upon the city. One hundred and twenty of the 124 buildings for graded schools have gardens this year, for decorative effect, and these have in turn inspired the children to have home gardens; 120,000 penny packages of seed have been sold the children by a local seedsman. As a consequence there are now thousands of young gardeners at work in the District who will never lose their fondness for the soil and will be better citizens in later years for their instruction in gardening.

The work around the school buildings has been done with little expense to the school authorities. The children have furnished the labor and the tools; shrubbery has been given by parents or bought by the teachers; seeds have been given by the seedsman who sold the penny packages to the children, and by the Department of Agriculture. These gardens have been valuable as additions to the schools for regular educational work. They have been sources of material for composition lessons, language lessons, drawing, spelling and arithmetic. They have taught the children that labor is necessary to produce and after such expenditure of labor one's rights must be respected and protected, so that there has been no vandalism for two years, where previously plants were uprooted and thrown upon the street with no other purpose than destruction. Soon the school grounds of Washington will be neighborhood ideals—those from which the surrounding homes will be able to receive inspiration—and not the forlorn, neglected spots they have previously been.

A teacher, to be a successful garden teacher, must be able to handle classes in the garden. A garden for decoration is not well adapted for class work, but the garden of individual plots, where every member of the class has a small plot, for which he is responsible, is admirably adapted for the teaching of the subject to classes. Through the aid of Dr. B. T. Galloway, chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, the normal school is allowed this privilege. About 7,000 square feet of land has been placed at the school's disposal. Upon this land, a sixth grade class of boys has been set to work under the direction of the normal school. A few practical lessons are given the boys in the greenhouse and they are then put upon the land, which they measure and lay off into garden plots 9x20, with paths two feet wide separating the plots. Each boy raises eight kinds of vegetables and two kinds of flowers. Whatever he raises is his own and it is no insignificant amount. Care is taken that the garden does not deteriorate into simply growing vegetables for the sake of the vegetables, but that the child is the most important growing factor in it and his development is far more important than the quantity of beans gathered or the size of the tomatoes grown.

The common products of the United States, which the geography of the grade requires him to recite about, and of which he knows so little, are grown on small plots bordering the garden and as the products mature lessons are given on them in their industrial and commercial importance to man. As these products have been harvested they have been followed by leguminous crops and it is planned to follow these by such crops that will show the boys the necessity of crop rotation. Beneficial and destructive insects, birds, toads and earthworms have been studied in their relation to garden work.

There is no other form of manual training that offers such a field for correlation with school-room work as gardening. Problems in practical arithmetic are innumerable. These boys have calculated the amount of fertilizer needed and its cost; the cost of fencing the garden; the cost of the entire garden and of each individual plot; the amount of lime needed on a plot at a given amount to an acre; the amount of seed and the quantity of rainfall to a plot. The correlation with geography has been mentioned. The freedom of speech gives much opportunity for good work in correct English. The physical development of the boys by outdoor work is a great point in its favor. In all there is no line of manual training so far in our public school work that develops the child intellectually and physically as gardening does. Its influence upon the homes of the land should make it appeal to those not directly interested in educational matters. It is sincerely hoped that the coming congress will see fit to appropriate money for its establishment in all of the schools of the city, as it is impossible for the department to take the burden of the city.

The recognition of the movement by a department of government to implant a love for the soil in the mind of the child while it is yet plastic has strengthened efforts in other parts of the country where previously it had been regarded as a fad. Representatives of the governments of Canada, Great Britain, New Zealand and France have inspected the work and returned to their own lands stimulated to further the movement among their own children. Throughout our own country the movement is widespread. It has been furthered by settlement workers, by business firms, by schools, by private individuals. "The idea is so simple and so natural," says a report from the Bureau of Education, "that the coming century will wonder how public educational institutions ever existed without them and were true to their purpose."

Philadelphia, Pa.—Jos. G. Neidinger, the wholesale dealer in florists' supplies, is now located in his new store at 1438 North 10th street, and is better than ever prepared to handle his rapidly growing trade.

Galesburg, Ill.—I. L. Pillsbury is making some improvements at his greenhouses on East Main street. He has torn down three of the old buildings and has erected a new rose house, a new violet house and a new carnation house.

Manchester, N. H.—James Kirby, who has suffered for a long time with kidney trouble, is reported seriously ill.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Conditions have remained very quiet during the past week. Several days of extreme heat did much to lower the quality of stock and to destroy what little life there was in the market. The influx of very poor asters was something remarkable, but something of a change for the better has now been made. The first asters brought good money, no matter what the quality, and naturally the growers were anxious to send in everything possible, but when they received their returns after the glut began, they saw the folly of shipping anything but the best of their crop. The result has been a diminution of receipts and an improvement in the average quality.

Beauties continue in very fair supply and prices have weakened a little in the last week or two. There are very few summer roses this year and those growers who have made an effort in this direction are doing very nicely. There are plenty of roses from young stock, but they are yet very small. Liberty is in good demand and Chatenay is called for. Few indoor carnations are now seen and most of the stock from plants in the field is of indifferent quality. There are many orders for the best carnations, but the wholesalers do not like to ship the present receipts.

Easter lilies are again a glut. Receipts continue to increase and there is no outlet save for funeral work. Auratum lilies were never so plentiful as this season, but not many album and rubrum are now seen. Most of the wholesalers have more gladioli than they know what to do with. Dahlias are on the increase. Sweet peas are seldom seen. Huge pots of Rudbeckia Golden Glow are offered cheaply. Phloxes, some of them splendid heads of bloom, are seen in most of the wholesale houses. The "green goods" situation remains unchanged.

Flower Show Plans.

Although nothing has yet been done in the way of definite arrangements, Chicago is sure to have a first-class show this fall. Interested parties are searching the city for a place to hold the show and the consensus of opinion is that the best place ever available for the purpose is Brooke's Casino on Wabash avenue. It is within walking distance of the loop, is on the ground floor, provides twice the space available last year and the hall is a beautiful one. The refusal of certain dates in November has been obtained.

Various Notes.

In these days of abundant supplies in the cut flower markets the wholesalers are compelled to look up new outlets for their stock. The time is past when a wholesaler could restrict his sales to those conducting legitimate flower stores. Nowadays any sort of a buyer in quantity is welcome. The wholesalers are compelled by circumstances to encourage all kinds of stores to use flowers for decorations and to sell them. Occasionally this brings a protest from a retailer who is hit, but in a broad way it is of benefit to the trade, as the universal use of flowers is certainly to be desired.

Peter Reinberg will not plant as many carnations as usual this year. He could not see his way to cut down his plantings of any rose and more space was demanded for Chatenay, Liberty and Richmond. The new addition to the glass houses is 40,000 additional Beauty plants.

E. E. Pieser, treasurer of the Kennicott Bros. Co., plans a trip to Lake Superior for three weeks, beginning August 26.

We have had much more than the usual rain since the carnation plants were put in the fields and for a number of growers the stock has been flooded most of the time since it was planted outside. The plants are not only small but they are very soft in many cases and the growers who have been thus unfortunate are asking themselves if they can count on this stock to give them good crops next season.

John Mangel has maintained an attractive show window all summer. A feature of his window for some months has been the showing of made-up floral pieces. The style here is the solid wreath, with a loose cluster of flowers at one side and ribbon added liberally. A wreath in his show window will last for several days, but they change the cluster of flowers and ribbon daily, so that the design has the appearance of being perfectly fresh.

L. Baumann & Co. have a collapsible wooden cut flower shipping box, on which a patent has been applied for.

August Poehlmann is completing a very fine colonial mansion at Morton Grove.

Bassett & Washburn are now cutting Easter lilies from cold storage Harrisii bulbs which had been grown in the Azores. They are so well pleased with them that they will increase their order for Azores bulbs this year at the expense of the order for Japanese longiflorums.

Martin Peterson reports the call for funeral work active on West Division street.

The north end florists and gardeners will have a picnic next Sunday at Brudy's grove, Lincoln avenue and Winona street.

Wietor Bros. have a field of nearly three acres in asters and are cutting in quantity. They report a big sale for field-grown carnation plants.

Miss Lillian Tonner, of E. H. Hunt's force, is again on duty after a month's trip on the Pacific coast.

P. J. Foley reports everyone more than pleased with the progress of the western lumber and mining venture in which he and several others in the trade are interested. They inspected the property while on their recent trip to the Yellowstone.

H. P. Gerhardt is reglazing his houses. He lost nearly 200 boxes of glass in a spring hailstorm.

Miss Helen Scott, daughter of Wm. Scott, of Buffalo and Corfu, was in the city a few hours on Monday. Miss Scott was on her way to Denver for a visit with her brother Phil and wife and the two little Scotts.

Adolph Fehr, of Belleville, Ill., visited the trade this week.

The business of the firm of W. W. Barnard & Co. has been taken over by The W. W. Barnard Co. The officers of the new company are W. W. Barnard, president; A. H. Goodwin, vice-president; Arnold Ringier, secretary.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business continues about in the same lines as last week. But the amount of stock on the market has changed greatly. Asters are almost scarce and the price has advanced accordingly. At the present time there are not enough to go around. And the quality that found its way to the dumps last week now sells at $1.00 per hundred.

Roses are more plentiful. Many growers are beginning to cut from their new stock, but there is not much sale for this kind of goods. Some very good American Beauties are to be had and they sell well.

Carnations are very poor and while there is quite a good demand for them there are but few that will pass muster. J. W. Rodgers is still cutting some very good stock from held-over plants.

Some very fine gladioli are to be had and they sell fairly well, but the supply is much greater than the demand.

Various Notes.

The Oakley Fair will be held this week and with $500 offered for displays of cut flowers and plants a rattling good show is looked forward to. George & Allan are out after the big money, but there will be warm competition, as several of the boys have entered.

The Cincinnati party, bound for Washington, left at noon Monday, via the B. & O. They were joined by Aug. R. Baumer and J. Schulz, of Louisville, and G. R. Gause and Mr. Jones of Richmond, Ind. Altogether there was quite a jolly party and they were out for a good time. Several of the boys took in the B. & O. excursion to Atlantic City last Thursday. They will stop off at Washington for the convention.

Chas. Jones has returned from his fishing trip and is resting up at his Walnut Hills store.

L. F. Benson and wife have also returned from a trip east.

L. H. Kyrk and wife are visiting near Tiffin, O.

Fred Gear and family leave for Atlantic City this week.

Theo. Bock, of Hamilton, O., has been selected as a judge at the Indiana state fair.

Florists' Meet.

The last regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held at Hagner's Garden on Price Hill and a jolly time was had. Bowling was the order of the evening and some startling scores were made. Lunch was then served and following that the club meeting was held. It was decided to form a bowling club among the members of the society and Chas. E. Critchell was appointed chairman of the committee to organize same with the following assistants: W. Schuman, Dick Sunderbruch, Jim Allan and C. J. Ohmer.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The excessive heat with the great amount of humidity in the atmosphere has made everyone yearn for the seashore or mountains the past week, and to make matters worse business seemed to be worse if such a thing were possible. It is a risky thing to enter any shop and ask how business is. The best you can get is a chorus of "Forget it, forget it." Stock of all kinds is plentiful and some of it very good, especially Kaiserins, Beauties, valley and asters. Among the growers, convention affairs has been the sole topic, except where one was looking for carnation plants, or trying to sell same.

All the growers in this vicinity are in the midst of carnation planting or getting ready to do so this coming week. I never saw better stock than most of them have. The favorite varieties in this section are Fred Burki, Lady Bountiful, White Lawson, Boston Market, and Queen Louise for white; Enchantress,

Pink Lawson, Joost, Floriana, and a few Scotts for pink; Cardinal and Flamingo for red, but you can still find a few of any of the older varieties scattered about. In talking to several of the old reliables one day this week I heard the following: "It takes the florist longer to drop the worthless and take up the good things in their trade than any other class of business men."

Various Notes.

THE AKEBIAS.

For many years the only member of the genus akebia grown in gardens was A. quinata, discovered and introduced by Robert Fortune while traveling in the Chusan district of China about the middle of the forties, a period in which that enthusiastic collector was instrumental in introducing so many beautiful hardy plants (particularly shrubs), into British gardens. It is a free-growing ligneous climber of the berberis family, but in general appearance it is widely removed from any of its immediate allies, as the long, slender, wiry shoots entwine themselves most persistently around any support, and, failing this, they form of themselves a close entangled mass. It is perfectly hardy in many parts of Great Britain, and as a wall plant is so in most other districts, while for a cool greenhouse, that is to say, a structure from which in winter frost is just excluded, but nothing more, there are few more useful subjects than this. Under glass, or even out of doors in mild winters, it is almost, if not quite, evergreen, but even then the new growth starts early in the season, and simultaneously with this the flowers are produced.

A singular feature is the arrangement of the sweet-scented flowers, which are borne in slender, drooping spikes, as the upper part consists of male blossoms, while the female ones occupy the lower portion. These last are by far the most effective, being about an inch across, and of a dark purple color, while the male ones are smaller and lighter in tint. The young unfolding leaves, composed each of five leaflets, as implied by the specific name, are of a bright green hue, but become deeper in tint later on. This species flowers best when the wood has been well ripened during the preceding autumn.

A second species, at present but little known, is Akebia lobata, which was first introduced from Japan about a dozen years ago. The branches of this are much stouter than those of the other, while the leaflets are in threes, and considerably larger. The disposition of the flowers is as in A. quinata, and, as in that species, they are more or less of a purple hue. Both flower at much the same time, but as a garden plant the majority would, I think, place the older kind first; still, both are interesting, and decidedly pretty. The curious long plum-like fruits are occasionally borne.—Gardeners' Magazine.

RAILROAD GARDENING.

"Travelers in England and on the European continent," says the Railway Age, "have often been attracted by the prevalence of gardening on the right of way of railways. Few, if any, American railway companies would feel justified in spending stockholders' money in landscape gardening, except in so far as this is necessary, from an artistic standpoint, in station towns and cities, where, as everyone will have observed, considerable sums of money have been spent in the beautification of the station grounds. But without spending a cent of railway revenue, much of the present right of way, far beyond stations, perhaps, can be improved to the advantage of the railway employes and increased safety regarding fires. A cultivated right of way obviously prevents the spreading of fires from locomotives, and to this extent such cultivation is in the direct interest of the companies. Indirectly, the employes who raise vegetables on ground provided by the companies will to that extent increase their earnings, which, in turn, will tend to Gardening by employes on the right of Gardening by employees on the right of way may be impracticable in those regions where land is very cheap or poor, but in all the more densely populated sections of the country it can be nothing but a valuable privilege. This is a line of development which the industrial or other railway departments might take up to advantage."

Toronto, Ohio.—David Aten and S. B. Wilson have dissolved partnership, Mr. Aten continuing the retail store and Mr. Wilson taking the growing end. He has removed the greenhouse to the head of Euclid avenue and is adding two other houses, 20x70 feet.

MUSHROOM SPAWN

The planting of Mushroom Spawn is generally considered a game of chance, so to speak, on account of the great quantity of spawn put on the market that is actually inferior. Avoid any chance of missing a crop by procuring and planting Michell's spawn. New shipments arrive every three weeks, an unusually fine lot at present. Prices: $1.50 per dozen bricks; per 100 lbs., $6.00; $55.00 per 1000 lbs. (250 lbs. at 1000 lb. rate.)

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

VISITED NEW YORK.—S. B. Dicks, of Cooper, Taber & Co., London, England.

SEED crops at growing stations in Ontario do not show average condition for this date.

CHARLES A. HEATH, of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, has returned from a trip to the Yellowstone.

REPORTS from Canada indicate that deliveries from that section on some of the important varieties of wrinkled peas will be quite short.

C. C. MORSE & Co., Santa Clara, have a sweet pea novelty called Helen Pierce, bright blue mottled on pure white, which they consider the most distinct of their many introductions.

SEED salesmen report it unusually hard to get business. Competition is so keen that he who holds out for a fair margin of profit sees the other man walk out with the order. They all see a finish ahead but do not say whether it will be theirs or the other fellow's.

A CHICAGO board of trade operator has noted the fact that nowadays every farmer who has half a dozen bags of grass seed to sell puts an advertisement in one or another of the papers published for the flour and feed dealers. He wonders how the grass seed dealers like it.

REPORTS are received from Michigan, Indiana and Ohio, to the effect that an insect that works at the root of the cucumber vine is doing serious injury to the crops of cucumber in those states. This together with the blight mentioned last week makes things look as though cucumber seed will be a very short crop. Nebraska and the far east may make up the loss, however.

THE onion set harvest is about finished. The crop on the whole shows sets of nice size and good quality. In all sections a heavy falling off from last year is reported. The two-thirds of an average crop predicted at the beginning of the harvest has held out to the end. An anxiety on the part of the smaller grower to realize at once on his product causes a present depression in the prices and makes it look as though the crop is over-plentiful. This condition of the market is likely to change as soon as the large buyers get to know that the crop is short.

COOPER TABER & Co., London, England, are out with their crop report for August. In general they say crops on the other side are doing well. Short crops will be: Beet—Edmand's and Egyptian, 90 per cent; Dewing's and Crosby's Egyptian, 60 to 65 per cent. Cabbage—Red Dutch, 50 per cent; Fottler's Brunswick, and Red Rack, 75 per cent; Savoy cabbage a failure. Kohl Rabi—White Vienna, for forcing, a failure. Sage, 50 per cent. Scarlet Globe radish, 75 per cent. Ruta boga, 50 per cent. White Milan Turnip, 50 per cent. Cowhorn turnip, 80 per cent.

DIGGS & BEADLES, Richmond, Va., report the summer seed trade as good, but not so good as last year. Heavy cabbage and potato crops were marketed below cost of production. Other truck crops have brought fair prices.

THE weather is very bad for the bean crops. The humid conditions are causing a mould that promises to do serious damage.

BURPEE'S SEEDS GROW

The Best that can be Grown!

AN UNPRECEDENTED DISTINCTION

THAT COMES TO US ON

OUR THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY

We have been commissioned by Henry Eckford, the world-famed Sweet Pea Specialist, to handle in America, his two most remarkable Novelties for 1906—HENRY ECKFORD AND QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

The undernoted descriptions made from Mr. Burpee's personal observation on Mr. Eckford's grounds this Summer, truthfully portray the characteristics of those two charming varieties of Sweet Peas:

HENRY ECKFORD—An intense deep orange self, absolutely distinct and entirely unique—in a class by itself. Three flowers of fine form, with well expanded standard (but not hooded) are borne upon stiff stems twelve to thirteen inches long. The flowers are of good size and fine substance, prettily placed on the stem. It is an ideal buttonhole flower, and unequalled for night decoration, as it lights up so well either by gas or electricity. Received first-class certificate of the Royal Horticultural Society in 1905, and was awarded both the silver medal and first-class certificate at the National Sweet Pea Show, when first exhibited in 1904.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA—Even more intense in color than Scarlet Gem and does not burn, while the flowers also average larger in size. The standard is well expanded, wings slightly spreading, and the intense, glowing, self-colored scarlet flowers are generally borne three on a stem.

These Novelties should be included in the collection of every grower of Sweet Peas.

PITTSBURG CUT FLOWER CO. (Limited) 504 Liberty St., Pittsburg, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower has been depressingly dull lately, flowers are abundant, demand light. Semple's asters are steadily growing in numbers. The quantity of poorer blooms of the early variety is large. Beauties from local growers are more plentiful and share in the general heaviness. Dahlias are improving.

Various Notes.

Samuel S. Pennock has purchased the building at 1610 Ludlow street. He will take possession October 1. The lot is about 25x80 feet. The ground floor will be added to Mr. Pennock's present large place, while the upper floors will be used for offices. The present tenants expect to vacate September 15, when the partition will be taken down and improvements pushed.

Berger Bros. will on September 7 remove from 1220 to 1237 Filbert street, with improved facilities for handling their growing business.

The Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market is actively preparing for a vigorous campaign. They have secured a fine lot of stock.

The Philadelphia Cut Flower Co. is pleased with the weekly payments inaugurated January 1; they have been liked by the growers.

Eugene Bernheimer is handling nice asters and gladioli.

Philip Freud has returned from Washington.

Among the many visitors are Messrs. H. W. Rieman, Irwin Bertermann, John Wiegand, Indianapolis; Dunn and Asmus, Detroit; Lloyd Blick, Norfolk, Va.

PHIL.

PEORIA, ILL.

Trade is very dull, the florists depending upon funeral work for business. Collections are reported very slow.

Earl Metz, formerly at Murray's, has resigned his position with Miss Belle Miller and accepted a position with J. M. Gasser Co., of Cleveland, Ohio.

James C. Murray has disposed of his South Adams street store, known as Murray's Seed Store, to Frank E. Roe. Mr. Murray still intends to handle seeds and expects to do a fine business in a retail way. Miss Sadie Kirby will have charge of same. Wilbur N. Brothers, of Ottawa, Ill., has accepted a position with Mr. Murray.

Carnation houses are all planted here. Most of the stock looks fine.

C. Loveridge has one rose house of the Richmond rose which looks fine.

SOAP SUDS IN LIQUID MANURE.

Will you kindly tell me if soap suds are injurious to plant life? I have a cistern for storing liquid fertilizer which is manufactured in an open tank and then drained into this cistern and then pumped on the plants as needed through the water pipes. I would like to drain the waste water from the kitchen sink and the stationary wash stands and the water from the weekly washings into it also, but am in doubt as to whether there would be anything injurious in it. C. J. B.

I am not prepared to say what proportion of soap suds would be beneficial or injurious to plants, but think that all the waste water from a kitchen sink would have nothing but good results. We remember very distinctly many years ago that a bed of pansies was situated just outside the kitchen door of a cottage. The good wife used to empty the dish water from the kitchen on this bed daily. Whether she emptied her wash tubs there too I do not know, but I guess she did. Whether it was the abundance of moisture or the greasy and soapy water I do not know, but never have I seen a prettier bed of pansies and they flowered until the snow came. I should say if your soap suds are diluted five or six times their bulk in water they will do no harm. W. S.

FEVERFEW IN WINTER.

To have a succession of bloom from feverfew what culture is necessary? Do you cut it back? If so, when? Would it bloom under glass in the winter and if so, which is best, solid beds or pots?

SOUTHERN.

This old, familiar border plant we consider of little value for cut flowers. Some scattering flowers are produced throughout the summer. When planted out the heaviest crop is in spring. The cutting back of old flower stems is all the stopping the plants need. We do not believe it would pay under any circumstances to grow it for cut flowers during winter, so we will not discuss the best method. W. S.

WE know our arguments are strong when we talk of ribbons, but we have the goods to back up our statements. Are you one of the florists who know what we can do? Better get in line, if you aren't. Samples free.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE indications are that the importations of French nursery stock for next season will be heavier than ever.

WHEREVER the improved varieties of lilac were seen in flower last spring there is a call for plants.

THE North Carolina dealers report natural peach pits to be in fair quantity and good quality.

THERE is a call from leading private estates for espalier-trained apple-trees, such as are so largely used in France.

MINNESOTA nurserymen are pushing northern grown plum seedlings, which are reported to have given good satisfaction to those who have used them.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Brown Bros. Co., of this city, are the introducers of the Baby Rambler rose to the trade of the United States. It was while on a visit to France in the summer of 1902 that Mr. Charles J. Brown first saw it, and readily foreseeing what a good thing it was immediately closed a contract with the originators, Messrs. Levavasseur & Sons, for the control of it in the United States until the fall of 1906.

CUTTING PEONIES.

Although too late to be of service for this season it is worth while recording here that in cutting peonies one should invariably leave one or more leaves on the stalk. If cut below the last leaf it usually prevents that eye from multiplying for the next season, and if the practice is continued it is likely to kill the plant in from four to five years. This statement is suggested by the fact that a nurseryman who three years ago sold a lot of Festiva maxima and other good sorts to a cut flower grower who is now clearing his land, bargained to take them back at the price received for the small plants, but refused when he went to see them blooming last month and found how they had been cut. He said they were one-third weaker than when he sold them.

SEQUOIA SEEDLINGS.

Contrary to prevalent belief, the famous "big trees" of California do reproduce themselves under certain favorable conditions. The trees seed freely, but the seed rarely germinate except when they fall where the ground has recently been burned over. Once started the young growth only needs a moderate amount of light and protection from fire and stock grazing. With some care this race of forest monarchs need not become extinct, but may be greatly multiplied. The number of mature trees is not great, and healthy young growth is rare, but in some situations there are plenty of seedlings. In order to establish these trees more widely, it is proposed to move some of the seedlings to localities where they will be apt to grow.

THE Southern Nurserymen's Association is holding its annual convention this week, August 16 and 17, at Norfolk, Va.

Queen Beatrice

The first extensive transplanting of the "big trees" has recently been finished in the General Grant national park, California. In the spring of 1904 it was noticed that a large number of tiny sequoias sprang up where debris had been burned. Advantage was taken of the opportunity to place the seedlings which appeared where they would have opportunity to develop. Those in charge have thus far transplanted about 1,400 and those set last year have nearly all grown.

PEACH PITS
We still have a few hundred bushels on hand. They will crack 90 to 95 per cent good. You had better order now and be on the safe side. Experience has taught us that Peach Pits one year old are better than the new crop.

SLUGS OR SNAILS.

I am fighting a small, dark snail. I think I got them into my greenhouses through plants bought with soil. Occasionally I find from one to two dozen small eggs the size of rape or cabbage seed in a pot under some dead leaves. What will kill them and clean the place of this pest?

Please give your best remedy for the small white fly in the greenhouse. They do up my asters. Tobacco or nicotine does not seem to bother them.

M. M. G.

There seems no distinction with many here between the two. In Europe slugs are the thing so troublesome to ferns. They have no shell or house to which to retire. Snails carry their shell on their back. Both eat what they are fond of in the vegetable kingdom, therefore, lettuce or cabbage leaves that have been dipped in water containing a teaspoonful of Paris green to a gallon of water and laid around on the benches will settle them. Air-slaked lime dusted over the benches and plants is the usual and effective remedy for slugs on ferns.

The sure, safe and effectual destroyer for the white fly in the houses is the hydrocyanic-acid gas. W. S.

ASTERS.

Is it better to leave cut asters in water a while as you do mums before shipping, or can you cut them and ship immediately? Which is the better way? How long is the average stem of the aster and how short acceptable at the wholesale houses? F. A. K.

Asters are by no means a flower that wilts quickly and there is no need of keeping them long in water before shipping. Cut late in the day and shipped the next morning is plenty long enough to keep in water. If circumstances do not allow of that then they can be cut and shipped at once, but the former plan is preferred.

The length of stem will depend on the season and scarcity of the flowers. When asters are plentiful an average of eighteen inches would be considered a fair stem and from eighteen inches to two feet a fine stem. When they first come in, thousands of flowers are sold with stems nine inches to one foot. In September we have seen Semple's branching variety with three-foot stems. About eighteen inches is the average. W. S.

WINTERING CANNAS.

I wish you would tell me how to winter canna and caladium bulbs.

L. W. B.

We have never failed to winter canna roots with scarcely any loss by putting them on boards beneath a carnation bench. If the ground is damp and you do not put down the boards they will start to grow. From the time you put the cannas under the bench until time to take them up to start them, there should be no need of watering the carnations so copiously that there is any drip. Drip is very injurious to the canna roots. That is why beneath a plant bench will not do. Caladiums we prefer to put under a rose bench, as the temperature is a little higher. They keep well there. ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

From the reports of several of the storemen in the West End, and also downtown, business was fairly good the past week. Most of the orders were for funeral work, and it is only occasionally that we hear of an order for a wedding or party.

First-class fancy stock is coming in light in all varieties, with demand fairly good. Roses in the first and second grades are a little too plentiful. The short-stemmed Brides, Maids, Carnot, Ivory and Kaiserin that come in are good in flower.

Carnations are very slow and of poor quality, especially the colored stock. Whites are fairly good and seem to sell much better than the colored stock. Asters are a glut in all colors and are selling very cheap. Gladioli and tuberose stalks are also in greater supply than the demand. Valley is fine but in poor demand. The above is about the only stock that comes to this market. Greens are as usual, plentiful.

Florists' Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Florists' Club took place on Thursday afternoon, August 10, with all the officers present, the attendance being thirty. The reports of the different committees were made. The transportation committee reported that everything was in readiness for a very enjoyable trip to Washington with our friends from Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit and Buffalo. The party left twenty-five strong at 8:30 Sunday night, via Wabash to Detroit. Anton Pohnan was elected a member of the club. The resignations of Henry Felter and H. M. Schisler were read and accepted.

Election of Officers.

The election of officers resulted as follows: For president, J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, Ill.; for vice-president, John Steidel, of Central, Mo.; for secretary, Emil Schray; for treasurer, Fred H. Meinhardt; for three trustees, for the three-year-term, Carl Beyer; for two years, Frank Weber; for one year, F. J. Fillmore, which will give the club a good set of officers for the year.

There was quite a discussion on cold storage bulbs in which all the growers took part. Frank Weber made a few remarks as to how to reach his place, where the next meeting of the club will be held. He also made a special announcement that he wanted to see the ladies present in full force. The meeting then adjourned after which a great deal of convention talk was indulged in.

Various Notes.

Arthur J. Ellison left for the northern lakes last week to visit his parents, but will return in a few days.

John Connon is very busy putting the finishing touches on two new houses. This, John says, will keep him from attending the S. A. F. at Washington.

Fred Bruenig's place, on Gravois avenue, is in fine shape. Rumor has it that Fred bought a hundred acre farm near Columbia, Ill.

George Waldbart's place at Clayton is producing thousands of fine white asters, single tuberose spikes, and gladioli. He also has 100 different varieties of dahlias, which are now coming in.

The force at Kuehn's will start in this week making preparations for the fall and winter trade, a good thing to do when the boss is away.

John Hausel, on Taylor avenue, reports a good summer trade at both of his places, the other one being on Easton avenue.

Robert Meinhardt, who recently opened a store in the West End, reports trade fairly good for this time of the year.

W. E. Jordan, out on Union avenue, is busy making necessary improvements for the winter. Willie has a fine lot of chrysanthemum plants.

Ostertag Bros. the past week turned out a large number of big funeral designs.

Mrs. J. F. Windt and daughter, not having returned home from the east, will keep Rude home from the convention.

The bowling club that will represent St. Louis in the S. A. F. bowling tournament at Washington will be made up as follows: C. A. Kuehn, Carl Beyer, J. J. Beneke, F. M. Ellis, Fred Meinhardt, Fred C. Weber and Theo. Miller. This team should make a good showing and we hope it will. J. J. B.

WAUKEGAN, ILL.—On August 8 deeds were filed here conveying fifteen acres of land near Libertyville from E. F. Kurowski, president of the John C. Moninger Co., Chicago, and his wife, to the Chicago Rose Co.

The Market.

There is no improvement to report in the line of business for the week. The weather continues cool and flowers are very plentiful, that is, seasonable flowers, such as asters. They are extra good and very cheap. The rose and carnation growers are in the midst of replanting at present and crops are short with everyone, but as the demand is light there is no ill feeling anywhere. Amaryllis and Lilium album and rubrum are much used by the dealers and they make a grand showing in the store windows. Tuberoses, gladioli, dahlias and coreopsis are in good supply and are good to fill in. Some smilax is being cut but is very soft yet and will not be good for several weeks. Maiden-hair and asparagus are plentiful.

Various Notes.

R. A. Wilson, of Monrovia, is in town.

James Kidd has returned from his trip to Southern California.

The McAllister St. Florists have removed to 942 Devisadero St.

Arthur Zinkman, representing M. Rice & Co. of Philadelphia, is visiting the local florists this week.

A. Rolleri, the green goods man, is taking a week's vacation at Santa Cruz.

J. I. Roney is contemplating a trip to Gold Field, Nev.

James Skinner, of Christmas tree fame, is in town on his annual trip. He brought with him fifty large bay trees in tubs, from Portland, Oregon, which he has disposed of in some of the prominent places around town.

The following clipping from the San Francisco Bulletin of August 6 would give the impression that the government officials know where to look when information is wanted for the Department of Horticulture:

Santa Cruz, Aug. 5.—Thomas Thompson, the local florist, received an order from the Department of Agriculture at Washington for one thousand paper white narcissus bulbs. The attention of the department to these flowers was first arrested by a cut in the Florists' Review of Chicago, in which was portrayed a field of these flowers at Thompsons' in full bloom in midwinter. Since then the agents of the department have visited the nursery and the flowers were pronounced to be in the finest condition of any in the country.

ROSES AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The time is near when our rose growers will commence to replant their stock under glass. From observations I have made I do not think there will be any more space devoted to this branch of the business this year than there was last. Although there have been a few houses erected in San Francisco, Burlingame, Elmhurst, Berkeley and several other places in this vicinity during the past year for this purpose, there have been a good many greenhouses discarded for rose-growing and planted either to carnations or general stock. I might add here that our San Francisco florists could use more good roses than they are able to obtain about ten months in the year. Growing good stock is not an easy task. A few hours' neglect may ruin a whole crop. As a consequence of some failures we have much more space devoted to carnations and the proportion is growing greater each season.

Beauties will be planted extensively again. Some growers will carry over their old plants and for that end are pruning heavily at present. Budded roses I notice are most favored, although some plant stock on its own roots, but I have always found that to produce a big flower and a strong stem you must have a big plant to begin with, and cuttings are a long time in furnishing one; hence the demand for field-grown budded roses.

Bridesmaid easily ranks second in the proportion of stock planted. Kaiserin is third on the list. Many growers do not handle it at all, but with others it is grown to the exclusion of any other white variety. Bride is a close second to Kaiserin and among the red varieties Liberty has to a great extent taken the place of Meteor, which is a very uncertain sort with us. Very few yellows are grown. Perle is the only kind I have seen, although some years ago Sunset was planted in a few places. Papa Gontier has also been relegated to a back seat, together with Rainbow, Niphetos, Cusin, and Golden Gate. I do not mean that these are no longer grown, but they are certainly not planted nearly as much as formerly.

Several wholesalers handle Ulrich Brunner, Mrs. John Laing and Pres. Carnot to good advantage and claim they are the best paying crops they grow. Cecil Brunner is a money-maker for almost everyone and I find it is usually planted in some out-of-the-way corner or often against some dark wall where nothing else will make any showing at all.

Of the newer kinds Chatenay seems to be the most favored and will be planted quite heavily in several of our largest places. Ivory has been tried but will be discarded from all accounts, as it shows no superior points to our other whites. Sunrise and Queen of Edgely will be planted in probably half a dozen places. And this finishes the list of roses in about the proportions I have found them in over a dozen of our largest commercial places.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Various Notes.

That the Woodland Park Floral Co. have not been idle this summer was plainly in evidence when the writer made them a call a few days ago. Everything was in fine shape. They have 25,000 carnations planted on the benches, some of the earlier planted ones in bloom, most of them tied up with the second tier of strings. Four houses of roses were fine, the mums strong and the violets clean. This firm is paying more attention to the decorative plant business. The increased call at their downtown store for such plants had to be met and a choice collection of crotons and other attractive plants are now being grown. The foundation for a new boiler was being dug, and the winter supply of wood, some 400 cords, was being stacked up before the rainy season sets in.

At the Washington Floral Co. a bench of 500 poinsettias showed that something would be doing about Christmas. Mums were excellent. A few carnation benches were still left in, but this week will see their finish. A nice office and show house were added this summer and the whole place has a neat and attractive appearance.

A visit from an old friend in the person of W. W. Wilmore, the dahlia specialist of Denver, Colo., was a pleasant surprise. This is Mr. Wilmore's first visit to the Pacific Coast and his impressions of our neck of the woods were unique. He would liked to have taken bodily some of our magnificent trees and transplanted them on his place in Denver. The giant ferns, the endless variety of shrubbery and evergreens were very attractive to a person used to the brown prairies, the cactus and sagebrush of Colorado. Mr. Wilmore was rather surprised at the ease with which dahlias are grown here. He recognized a good many of his own introductions, as his trade in Seattle and the state of Washington is quite extensive. Mr. Wilmore had been to the fair at Portland, and had seen all the sights even to "Gay Paree" on the Trail.

Other visitors this week were Sidney Clack, of Menlo Park, Cal., and Mrs.

HANNAH HOBART THE PRIDE OF CALIFORNIA

The grand prize winner in competition with the latest and very best products in Carnations, east or west, for the last eight years.

Mr. John A. Balmer, of Olealum, Washington, after his visit to our nurseries in January, 1902, wrote an article for a trade paper in which he said: "The Hannah Hobart is really a remarkable flower, never less than four inches, and frequently four and one-half inches across. In color it is a shade deeper than Lawson, but the petal arrangement is quite different, in this respect it most resembles the old Jubilee, but of course the color is different. I saw two large houses of it at Sievers', and the sight is one long to be remembered, hundreds of blooms and not a poor one in the lot, and everyone the exact counterpart of the other, no burst calyxes, but every flower supported on a 24-inch stem, and standing up like soldiers. There is certainly no carnation of its color that can equal it."

The above is a truthful statement of facts by a very competent gentleman, and if needing verification, the simple assertion that the flowers of this magnificent variety of Carnation have been sold wholesale as high as $1.50 per dozen, and none less than $1 per dozen up to date, should be enough to convince anybody of its intrinsic value. (See illustration of an average bloom in the Florists' Review, June 1, 1905.)

The constant inquiry by everyone who has seen the plants in flower is: "When will the Hannah Hobart be for sale?" This led us at last to the conclusion to distribute the same next year, and we are ready to book orders from now on for delivery beginning Jan. 1, 1906.

Send your orders in early because they will be filled strictly in rotation. Price, $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

GLEN COVE, N. Y.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

The regular monthly meeting of this society was held August 2 at the Glen Cove Greenhouses. The attendance was again large. President Harrison occupied the chair. The chief business was the further organization of a flower show to be held in Glen Cove. The dates fixed for such were November 1 and 2. It is to be hoped that this, the society's first show, will be a success. Competition is open to all comers, so all are heartily invited. Already two handsome cups and other substantial prizes have been promised, but more will be heard of at a subsequent date.

The exhibits this month were chiefly fruits. President Harrison came forward with a melon, a hybrid of his own raising. It is one of good size and shape, red fleshed and of excellent flavor. Such was the verdict after the slicing.

Mr. Halloway brought some fine apples and a tempting bunch of black hothouse grapes. The variety was Madresfield Court and the berries showed no signs whatever of splitting. Splitting seems common to this grand variety, but without doubt Mr. Halloway knows the way to success with it. Naturally this bunch had to be sampled, as all declared that melons and grapes go well together.

Mr. Rickards, of Stumpp & Walter Co., put up a prize of $3 for next meeting's best exhibit.

CONVOLVULUS MAURITANIOUS.

Notwithstanding that Nicholson thought this beautiful prostrate twining plant worthy of a full page colored plate in his Dictionary of Gardening, there is reason to fear that it is falling out of cultivation, and yet forty and less years ago it was much employed as an edging to vases and large stone baskets, etc., where its slender stems bearing bright silvery blue blossoms could hang down over the sides in graceful festoons. It was associated with thunbergias, maurandia, lophospermum and kindred subjects, and also with prostrate foliage plants. It is too good and useful a subject to be allowed to fall away into almost utter neglect. It is not very fastidious as to soil; what is generally recommended for it is a light sandy earth and a sunny position, but it will flourish and bloom freely in a stiff soil in some positions. This convolvulus is generally propagated by means of cuttings; it also can be raised from seeds. I am wondering if there is on record any instance of variation in the type being found among seedling plants.—Horticultural Advertiser.

ARENARIA MARITIMA.

It is a pity that this charming plant is not more generally grown; like the sandworts generally, it is of very low habit of growth, the branching, slender foliage rising but a few inches above the soil, over which it spreads freely from a central rootstock. It is very floriferous, the whole plant being covered with pure white blossoms about as large as a shilling, forming a sheet of snowy purity for weeks in succession. It is perfectly hardy, and thrives in ordinary garden soil in the full sun, flowering from April onwards, and whether in patches, in beds, on the flat, or on rocky slopes forms one of the most attractive plants of its kind we know of. —Gardeners' Magazine.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The market here has taken on a livelier look the past week. Several functions of note and a large number of funerals have kept things going pretty lively. Very little shipped stuff is being handled because of the heat and the inability of that class of goods to stand shipping. A small quantity of new roses is coming in and looking well. Asters this year have surpassed in quantity and quality that of previous years and the demand equals the supply. With asters are antirrhinums, coreopsis and old-fashioned flowers which are coming into favor again. Carnations are not coming in in very large quantities and are not yet looking up to their usual form.

An indication of fall trade is showing itself in the increased demand for palms, rubbers and ferns for which good prices are being realized. A number of advance orders for wedding decorations indicate an early social season.

Various Notes.

Your correspondent visited Independence one day last week and was royally entertained by the two florists there. A. Broman's was the first place he visited and was agreeably surprised at the quantity of glass and the quality of the stock produced. Mr. Broman came here from Chicago thirteen years ago and entered the employ of Geo. Kellogg, at Pleasant Hill, where he stayed five years. Eight years ago he purchased ten acres in Independence and started in on his own hook, raising roses for the Kansas City market. He has at present 25,000 feet of glass, two-thirds of which is used for roses and the rest for carnations and miscellaneous stuff. Miss M. Dalley purchases his entire output under contract each year for the past six years and that she handles A-1 stuff goes without saying, as Mr. Broman grows nothing but first-class stock.

The other establishment was that of E. G. Bunyar, on North Main street. Your correspondent has known Mr. Bunyar the past nineteen years and has watched with satisfaction and some surprise the rapidity with which he forged ahead among the best here. Mr. Bunyar has at present about 10,000 feet of glass and has in contemplation the erection of 10,000 feet more to handle his increasing trade and he is erecting at present one palm house 20x50 for decorative plants. His holdings consist of two and one-half acres and he is now on a deal to purchase two and one-half more. He markets three crops of plants in 2½-inch pots each year and his shipping trade has reached such proportions that with his limited amount of glass at present he cannot fill nearly all his orders; hence the necessity of building.

James Hayes, of Topeka, Kan., in a letter to your correspondent, reports that the trade in the past year has eclipsed any former year in his recollection. Mr. Hayes is Topeka's premier florist and handles the greater part of the trade there.

Geo. M. Kellogg left here the first of the week for the convention and a visit to his old home in Massachusetts.

SEASONABLE REMINDERS.

As we are again approaching the season of cold weather a few reminders by way of preparation may not be out of place.

It being impossible to produce good stock in houses which are draughty and leaky, any repairs necessary to put them into good condition should be done while the wood is dry and the weather such that a few hours' exposure to the open air would not affect the general health of the plants. Ventilators should be readjusted and the machinery put into good working order.

Where the putty is in very bad condition it is sometimes more profitable to rip out the glass, repair and repaint the sashbars and reset the glass. Where the putty is not so bad an application of Old English putty, distributed by a putty bulb along the edges of the glass next the sash bars, will make an old house "maist as guid as new" for a season or two.

Boilers and piping should be thoroughly inspected, repaired where necessary, and tested. Fire-boxes and grates should be put into good order and a general inspection should be made of everything necessary to carry the plant in good order through the winter.

During the busy season of planting, cleaning up, etc., this work cannot be attended to by the ordinary help and it would be more profitable to call in tradesmen than to have the work drag along until cold weather sets in and run the risk of getting mildew or black-spot. I have frequently seen men on the roofs even as late as October, trying to patch up the leaks, when it was out of all reason to expect satisfactory work, men and putty being in a half-frozen condition. Get your repairing done as the winter is surely on its way. RIBES.

FIELD-GROWN

Asparagus Sprengeri

Those who have purchased our field-grown plants in the past, are convinced that they are much superior to pot-grown, both for pots and bench culture.

When housed, they immediately start into active growth, throwing up numerous growths, which come to perfection much earlier than those from pots. Field culture adds to the vigor of the plants and an enormous crop of green is the result.

PLANTING CUCUMBERS.

One of the most prevalent troubles that beset cucumber plants is damping at the neck, and to prevent this it is necessary to use great care in planting so that there will be no danger of an over-supply of moisture lodging around the necks of the plants. Where raised benches are used, and these are the best for cucumber culture, there is not so much danger, but in solid beds, unless the necks of the plants are raised well above the level of the soil, trouble is apt to occur. When raised benches are employed the best plan is not to fill the bench up as would be done for other crops but to place a few shovelfuls of soil in a round pile where the plants are to be set. This soil should be a good, turfy loam not too finely broken; the rougher the better, as it insures the freer passage of water. It is necessary to have some well decomposed manure mixed with the soil and this should also be lumpy rather than finely broken.

A great deal depends upon the nature of the soil at command. Some soils are much more productive of fungus diseases than others, but as a rule soils from high ground are the best to use. Some claim a stiff, retentive soil is the more productive of disease, but we have seen cucumbers attacked just as badly when a light, sandy soil was used, so that it is hard to judge the soil from general composition; the only means of knowing is by trial. Should a trial prove that the plants are attacked by stem-rot in the soil used, it is a good plan to use a little air-slaked lime in the soil, mixing it in some time previous to using, and after the plants are set to use some powdered charcoal around the necks of the plants taking care when watering to keep the charcoal dry.

It will be some time after planting before the plants can utilize the little heaps of soil provided but as soon as the roots begin to appear on the outside more soil should be added, only a few inches at a time however, and according as the plants attain size. The soil supplied in this way may be made a little richer than that first used, bone-meal or some other good commercial fertilizer being employed.

Where solid beds are used it is necessary that some means be adopted to confine the roots of the plants somewhat as cucumber plants fruit much more freely and run less to growth when the quantity of soil is limited and root-space curtailed.

The plants should be set at distances of four feet apart along the trellis to which they are to be trained, and where several trellises are used in the width of the house they should be far enough apart so that the one row will not throw too much shade over the other. The distance will depend a good deal on the width and construction of the house but it is well to, if possible, have the trellises at least four feet apart.

A house eighteen feet wide will accommodate four rows of plants, the passage-ways acting as intervening space.

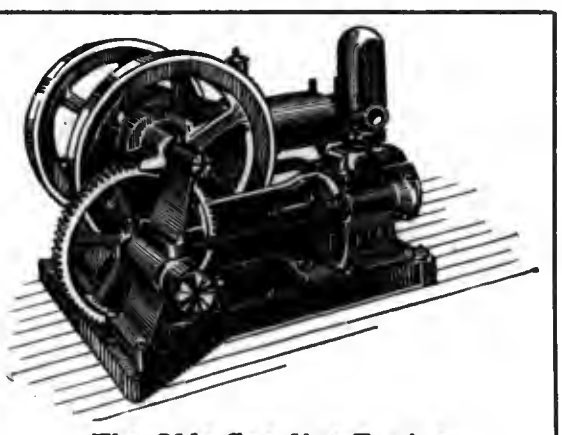
SKINNER'S PATENT SYSTEM OF IRRIGATION, TROY, O.



Those who have not felt the need of irrigation need not take the time to look over this page, but to those who have suffered from dry weather and who wish to reduce the chance of a failure to a minimum, I would like to explain why they are making a mistake in not installing the Skinner system of irrigation on their grounds. To the gardener and florist, whose crop value often run up into the hundreds of dollars to the acre, the ability to apply water as needed, and in a way that will be beneficial to the crops, will often pay for the outlay several times over in one season. One of my customers stated that with one line of my irrigation, 120 feet in length, he was able to grow $90 worth of spinach.

The cost of my system is so small, compared to the results obtained, that there is no reason why every one who grows a crop should not have at least part of their ground fitted out with it. As compared with the lawn-sprinkler system, my system can be put up complete, pipe, nozzles and labor, for less than the nozzles cost in the other, while in results there is no comparison whatever.

The great mistake many make in this matter is to wait until the drought comes before they start to put in the irrigation. Do you wait until your plants begin to freeze before you buy coal? Yet the drought is as certain to come as the cold, and your loss in the one case is as certain as in the other. The Skinner system once put up is up forever. Put up right it is not in the way of cultivation and is always ready for use.

Buy your outfit now and put up at least a line this fall. You will then know just how to put it up and will lose no time when the dry weather comes. Five acres can be put up in three or four days after you know how to go to work with it. The nozzle cost per acre is but $10 and but 800 feet of pipe is required.

Our pumping outfits are built by one of the best known firms in the world and have been recently improved, until today they represent an ideal method of obtaining water. No tank is necessary, the water being pumped directly into the pipes with a steady, uniform pressure.

The Olds Gasoline Engine.

The illustrations here given are from the well known seed firm of H. A. Dreer, and show to some extent how extensively the Skinner system is being installed. This firm was among the first to install the system in the east and have been unstinted in their praise of it from the start. Their place at Riverton, N. J., is too well known to need description. It is one of the show places in this country and all florists, when in the east, make it a point to pay it a visit.

Another place in which the system has been installed to a large extent is at the Cottage Gardens at Queens, N. Y.

One of the largest overhead irrigation plants in this country is at Newbern, N. C., on the farm of Hackburn & Willetts. Two years ago this firm was irrigating about five acres with the lawn-sprinkler system and it was with much difficulty that they were induced to give the Skinner system a trial; since then they have put in about 17 000 nozzles.

At Wilmington, N. C., Mr. D. N. Chadwick had five acres of lawn sprinklers, in which the nozzles alone cost him $125 per acre. He has since installed the Skinner system, using 12,000 nozzles.

In the short time the Skinner system has been before the public there have been almost 100,000 nozzles used, within no case a failure where it was put up according to instructions.

WINANDY BROS., 3727 No. Lincoln Street, CHICAGO.

MR. C. W. SKINNER, Troy, Ohio. Dear Sir:—I am pleased to state that your system of irrigation has given us great satisfaction during the recent dry spell. I am only sorry that our entire grounds are not covered with this system, but we are continually adding to same and a few dry seasons like the one we have just passed through will, no doubt, see the greater part of the ground covered.

THE CANADIAN CONVENTION

The eighth annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association, which opened in the Natural History Hall, Montreal, on August 8 at 2 p. m., was the most successful gathering of the craft, both in point of interest and attendance. Never before in the history of the association has the attendance been as well distributed, or included so many delegates from distant points. There were delegates in attendance from Winnipeg in the west, to Truro, N. S., and St. John, Newfoundland, in the east.

The convention was called to order at 2 o'clock by President Geo. Robinson, Montreal, who introduced Mayor Laporte of Montreal, who delivered an address of welcome, extending to the delegates a hearty welcome and inviting them to be the guests of the city on Thursday. Mr. Wm. Gammage of London replied in behalf of the visiting delegates.

The president's address brought up some keen discussions on two or three points, the most noticeable of which was the tariff; this gave the politicians a chance to give us some of their speeches they had left over from last election. It was considered that many changes were necessary to properly readjust the tariff to suit the present day needs, and as the government has appointed a special tariff commission to go through the country and get reports, it was decided to have a special committee from the association address the commission. The changes that it was felt should be made will not materially affect the amount of duty to be collected. It was finally decided to stand by the report passed at the last convention at Ottawa.

Mr. W. Manda, of South Orange, N. J., was present and took part in the discussion. He made some good suggestions, and very ably upheld his free-trade ideas. He thought that many of the restrictions that were put upon trade by the several countries were never intended by our Creator. Certain localities, he said, were specially adapted to grow certain things, and he thought it a shame that a tariff bill should be put out to restrict the market. He considered that it was different with manufactured articles; with manufactured articles the difference in manufacturing them in one place from in another was not as a rule very great, nor was the loss as great to all concerned as with commodities of the greenhouse or field.

The reports of the secretary, treasurer and standing committees were read and adopted. The judges of the trade exhibit presented their report and awarded as follows:

D. J. Sinclair, Toronto, certificate of merit for florists' supplies. Campbell Bros., Simcoe, certificate of merit for new varieties of gladioli. Dupuy & Ferguson, Montreal, diploma for specially well selected collection of gardeners' tools. Hall & Robinson, Montreal, diploma for collection of small ferns. Special mention was also made of display of well made flower pots exhibited by the Foster Pottery Co., Hamilton, Ont., also for exhibit of Campbell's vaporizers made by Blackie Bros., Halifax; these were specially recommended by some of the delegates present who had used them.

The evening session was opened with an illustrated lecture on park designs by Frederick G. Todd, Montreal; this was a most interesting lecture, the lecturer using some 300 slides showing the park systems of the best cities of the United States and Canada. Especially did he dwell on the park system in Boston, and dwelling on the advantage of having a definite system in connection with parks.

Mr. Thos. McHugh, gardener to Forest and Stream Club, Dorval, Quebec, gave an essay on "How to Keep a Greenhouse Attractive in Winter," which must have taken much time in preparation. His list of plants to grow at different seasons with their full botanical names evoked much merriment amongst the younger members of the craft, as the long Latin names somewhat resembled the roll call in the Russian army. Mr. McHugh had the satisfaction of not only being complimented on his paper but heard many complimentary remarks on the condition of the greenhouses of which he has charge.

The paper on "How to Keep Grounds Attractive in Summer," by Mr. Burrows, gardener to R. B. Angus, of St. Anne de Bellevue, was very interesting and it might be remarked after visiting this place on Friday we found that he carried his theory into practice.

At Wednesday morning's session we were disappointed in not having a paper by Mr. J. H. Dunlop of Toronto on "A Review of Roses and Carnations to Present Date and Their Special Requirements." Mr. Dunlop was unable to be present himself, and as his paper did not materialize, Mr. Wm. Gammage of London was asked to open the discussion on carnations, and Mr. Ed Dale on roses. These men brought up lively discussions, not only on the method of growing, but on the new varieties. It was generally considered that of the standard varieties of carnations at present in cultivation that Enchantress was the most profitable. Fiancee, Fred Burki, My Maryland and Lady Bountiful were considered among the best of the new varieties. With the new roses Mr. Dale did not consider that any of them had come up to the standard set by Bride and Maid. Mr. J. Bennett's paper on "How to Grow Nephrolepis" was freely discussed. The discussion brought up many comments on the new varieties of nephrolepis upon the market, and a hint was thrown out that many old varieties were being sent out under new names.

The essay on violets by F. L. Girdwood was fine. He dealt particularly on double violets; this discussion brought Mr. Wm. Fendley, the violet expert of Brampton to his feet, who answered many important questions regarding the growing of single violets, and the same gentleman was asked how and what varieties of sweet peas he grew, which he had been shipping with two-feet stems during the early spring. He replied that he could not answer the question as the growing had been done wholly by one of his boys, but he promised to have him at the next convention to answer the question himself.

The choice of place for next meeting and the election of officers took up the evening session on Wednesday, and as Mr. Downing, who was to have given a paper on greenhouse fertilizer was not present, this was left out.

An invitation from Mr. Wm. Hunt of the Guelph Agricultural College was extended to the convention to meet in Guelph next year. He also presented a petition signed by the florists of Guelph and the towns around, and as it was considered that the agricultural college would be quite interesting for the delegates, and being close to Toronto they would be able to take in the exhibition, it was decided to meet there.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Wm. Fendley, Brampton; first vice-president, Wm. Hunt, Guelph; second vice-president, John Walsh; secretary, A. H. Ewing; treasurer, H. Simmers; committee, two years, Edw. Dale; three years, J. Campbell, J. Suckling and J. Eddy; representative on industrial exhibition board, H. Simmers.

On Thursday the delegates were entertained by the city of Montreal to a drive around, viewing the parks, were taken up the mountain, entertained at luncheon, then given a trolley ride through the city, and visited the harbor. Montreal has without exception every advantage to make a city attractive. The delegates were very much impressed with their mountain drive and the view from Observation park is one that will long be remembered. The banquet was held on Thursday evening at the Welland House. Mr. Geo. Robinson, the president, took the chair and kept everything in order. Besides good speeches a number of good songs were rendered by local singers, comic songs by Mr. McQuarry kept the delegates in good humor. A French song by Mr. Pinoteau was quite interesting to the English delegates. The toast list included "The King," which was responded to by singing "God Save the King." "Our Country" was responded to by Mr. J. Suckling of Truro, who among other things, remarked that Nova Scotia was not a bad place to live in, although the Grits did carry everything. "Our Society" was responded to by Mr. H. Simmers, Mr. John Walsh and Mr. P. McKenna. "Our Sister Societies," by W. Manda for the American societies, Mr. Wm. Wilshire for the Montreal gardeners and Mr. J. Bennett for the Montreal florists, and Mr. Walter Wilshire for the Toronto gardeners and florists. The toast to the city of Montreal was responded to by Alderman Packard. "The Ladies" by Mr. D. J. Sinclair.

On Friday the delegates were entertained by the gardeners and florists of Montreal and were taken out to St. Anne de Bellevue to visit the private places of the wealthy men of Montreal; this was without exception one of the most enjoyable days that the delegates put in, and it was certainly a treat to see the magnificent places that are attended to by private gardeners we had met in the convention hall; it would be impossible to enumerate them all. After visiting a number of them we were entertained at luncheon on the lawn of R. B. Angus, Esq. After doing justice to a magnificent luncheon, and drinking the health of our entertainers we took the boat down the Lachine Rapids to Montreal, thus ending a thoroughly enjoyable day's sight-seeing. FERTILIZERS IN GREENHOUSES.

[A paper by Wm. Downing, foreman for H. L. Janzen, Berlin, Ont., written for the Canadian Horticultural Society at the Montreal meeting, August 8 to 10, 1905.]

In writing a paper on fertilizers for greenhouse purposes to be read before so august an assembly as the C. H. A. one is at a disadvantage, owing to the many differences of opinion as to the meaning of the word "fertilizer" to be found among the members. To go to the dictionary for a meaning, as applied to horticulture we find that "any substance added to the soil to produce a more fertile condition" is the solution offered. It will be a considerable help to keep this in view as the text of the paper.

At this point perhaps it were as well to state that my intention is not to exploit any special artificial manure, for two reasons:

1—That I have not given any of the articles manufactured here in this country sufficient test to speak with that nicety of opinion requisite.

2—That remarks made before a body of florists on such subjects would cause no little ill feeling to be engendered in the hearts of those whose products were not placed in the front, and, as it is stated that comparisons are odious, particularly so from a business standpoint.

First let us look at the requirements of plants in the direction of food so as to better appreciate the value of the various manures. Sulphur, potassium, sodium, calcium, magnesium, iron, chlorine, silicon phosphorus and nitrogen are the elements which go to build up a plant and are derived from the soil. The three which are most essential are nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium. The other elements mentioned are nearly always in a soil in sufficient quantities without adding the form of fertilizers, or are in chemical combination with these three essentials and are so used.

To now come to the fertilizer for greenhouse use, it is fitting to take first the manure most commonly used, as it also contains largely the most necessary of plant foods, nitrogen.

The best manure for the supply of this the all important food is that derived from the excretions of animals and not only does it contain all that is necessary for the growth of a plant, but it is the cheapest and most lasting in its effect. As to the manner of using, everything depends upon the size of place and time at the disposal of the grower.

As a liquid it cannot be surpassed, and this is the best mode of application, but as a mulch on bench-grown stock it is very effective. No more need be said, as everyone who is a florist knows as much as can be known of the uses of this valuable manure.

Guano is another generally reputed nitrogenous fertilizer and when this manure was first offered such was the case, but later samples only contain about nine per cent of nitrogen and are really phosphatic guanos. These are still of value, but do not equal the Peruvian. In buying the above mentioned manure always get a guaranteed analysis. Various simple tests as to genuineness are: The color should be like coffee and milk; if dark brown it contains too much water, if gray too much earth. Odor should be ammoniacal. To the touch it should be like oil and when broken the pieces should have a crystalline appearance which denotes nitrogen.

Fish refuse is often offered as a fertilizer and is generally of good value and will contain from ten to twenty per cent of nitrogen and some quantities of potassium and magnesia which are added to act as preservatives.

Native guano is a preparation offered by some of the large cities of Europe. It is prepared from the sewage and contains valuable quantities of nitrogen. It is much preferable to have it in the fertilizer form than to use it as an ingredient of the drinking water. I may mention here that the Manchester Corporation, England, offers this at $20 per ton and thereby turns a waste product to good use. Probably some of the enterprising florists of Montreal might go to work and use a like waste to the advantage of the trade.

Nitrate of soda is another nitrogenous manure but should not be largely used, as its tendency is to produce rapid, soft growth, with a consequence, deterioration of the blooming qualities. For finishing up mums, or putting color into the bloom, it cannot be excelled if given in weak doses or mixed with common salt.

Sulphate of ammonia is another chemical manure containing much nitrogen but the essential is not so readily available as in the nitrate of soda. It can, however, be used without the same injurious effect as is produced by the use of nitrate of soda.

When Heating by Steam or Hot Water

Whether it is in a greenhouse or any other place, there are a number of things to be taken into consideration which are too often overlooked until one finds that the coal bill is too large, and that he has to stay up a great deal of the night or put someone on to fire the boiler. I can furnish and install anything in the line of Heating Apparatus, and if you favor me with any work or an order for material, I can assure you prompt and satisfactory service. You will do yourself a favor by consulting me on this subject. It will not cost you anything and I should like to be given a chance to figure with you on anything you may need.

WITH A COIL BOILER.

I am building three connected houses, one 14x52, ten feet to ridge, one foot glass in one side and glass in gable; one house 15x30, glass in both gables, and one house 10x30. I want to heat the houses 14x52 and 10x30 to 52 to 55 degrees and the other one to 60 degrees when the outside temperature is as low as 30 degrees below zero. I am building a coil boiler, which contains 100 lineal feet of 1½-inch pipe, besides the manifolds and has a grate surface of six square feet. Will this be large enough? Will a smoke-stack eight inches in diameter and twenty feet high be all right? In making up the coils in the greenhouse is there any objection to using tees and nipples? I shall use 2-inch pipe for flows and 1½-inch for returns. C. L. W.

To secure the heat desired in your various houses they will require the following piping: The house 14x52 should carry one 2-inch riser, or flow, returning by nine 1½-inch returns. The house 10x30 should have one 2-inch flow returned by seven 1½-inch returns, and the house 15x30 will require one 2-inch riser returning through fourteen 1½-inch returns.

The boiler you have planned is too small by about one-half. The piping as stated above is equivalent to 565 square feet of radiation. The boiler with 100 feet of 1½-inch pipe would have capacity for heating about 400 square feet of radiation. In order, therefore, to be on the safe side the boiler should carry 150 lineal feet of 1½-inch pipe.

The idea of building manifolds with tees and nipples is an excellent one; in fact it is to be preferred to the cast-iron manifold in all greenhouse work. The specifications given contemplate the flow pipe carried under the ridge and the expansion tank connected to the main return near the boiler and elevated so the bottom of the tank is from eight to twelve feet above the highest point in the flow pipe, which should be at the point in the flow pipe most remote from the boiler. I think it would be well to increase the size of the flue or smoke-stack to at least ten inches. L. C. C.

Best of all the new forms of the Nephrolepis

WE LIKE THIS NEW FERN SO WELL THAT WE SHALL GROW IT LARGELY, FEELING CERTAIN THAT BOTH OUR WHOLESALE AND RETAIL TRADE WILL CALL FOR IT AS SOON AS ITS MERITS ARE KNOWN.

We are also the Introducer's Western Distributing Agent.

Of all the crested forms of the Nephrolepis, this is the hardiest and best. Fronds more dense, more finely pinnate, of more massive and delicate effect. Thrives in same temperature and under same conditions as the old Boston fern. Having more fronds than any other form, well supported by stout midribs, it is of more shapely and bushy habit, yet dwarf and compact. A decided improvement over other introductions and is admitted by the highest authorities to be the best introduction to date for all purposes.

Asters.

I would like to write you a few lines in regard to asters wilting when about four inches and over in height, also when blooming. I note an article written by J. P. R., page 556, of the August 3 issue, speaking of the same trouble that I am having this year. Never before has it happened to me, and it did not trouble my asters till now, or about four weeks ago. My asters are on soil that has not been worked for several years, the sod plowed under last fall. It was in good shape this spring, and well pulverized. About a week ago I found a plant that had just wilted. I took it up and found a large, white worm, usually called the grub worm, and have since found many in my yard and not doing any damage except to the asters, so far as I can see. I set out about 1,500 plants and about one-fourth of them are gone, and I should like to know if land plaster and lime mixed would kill such pests by putting it on the surface and then drag it into the soil that is for next season's use. I am discouraged with my asters this year. All of the other stock is in fine shape.

I wish you could tell me what is the cause of Rex begonias losing all their leaves to the stems and then beginning to shoot out new ones. These are last winter's cuttings and were doing fine till about six weeks ago. Is there any particular soil or temperature for them?

HUNDRED LEGS.

I have an insect in the greenhouses about an inch long with lots of legs, hard brown shell, smells badly if killed. It lies mostly in pairs or massed in pots. They are common enough but are getting too numerous and I would like to know how to get rid of them. They are destroying all my young plants and lime seems to have no effect on them. Kindly inform me about it. C. J. D.

This centipede, or species of it, if it is the same as we have often seen creeping around the surface of rose beds, is harmless and we found by laying a few tobacco stems on the bench that these little creatures succumbed. We found them stiff and dead by the hundreds. I suppose they had evolved in their expansive brains that life was not worth while if annoyed by the pernicious weed. We figured out that if a little handful of tobacco stems killed its hundreds, a cigarette fiend would do for a house of 60,000 feet capacity. The tobacco will kill them. It produces acute indigestion.

Dear Sir:-

As per your request we give our experience with To-Bak-Ine Liquid as a spray for Thrip. We used two tabelspoonful of the liquid to a gallon of water, and found fourteen gallons sufficient for a house of Bridee 25x300 ft. We applied this about two or three days apart, and found it cleaned the Thrip completely out of the house. Since then we have used it in other houses as a spray, and find this method very much better than fumigating, and think we will depend entirely on spraying with To-Bak-Ine Liquid in the future, as it does the work so much better than smoking.

Yours very respectfully,
Bassett & Washburn

Spray! Spray! with To-Bak-Ine Liquid

A positive destroyer of Thrips, Green Fly and Red Spider. DIRECTIONS—Based on a house 25x100—4 teaspoonfuls to a gallon of water, used eight times the first week and twice each week thereafter will absolutely keep your houses clean from insects. Use a good air or compressed sprayer with a misting nozzle. We recommend our Simplicity Automatic Misting Sprayer as the best. (This is the sprayer used by Messrs. Bassett & Washburn.)

Can you afford to let your plants get infected before at least trying To-bak-ine Liquid? It is the only 45% solution on the market and has other valuable features found in no other nicotine solution. Send for full particulars and directions, cost, the best method of spraying and the best sprayer.

WHITE FLY AGAIN.

We are experiencing some trouble from a small white fly on asters. They work from the underside of the leaves, sucking the juices and causing the leaf to discolor and dry up, thus depriving the plant of nourishment through the leaves. The fly is about one-eighth of an inch long when fully developed and the bluish white eggs are similar to green aphis eggs. Please advise as to a preventive. J. A. S.

If the asters are outdoors I know nothing about it. If under glass, then it is the very troublesome little white fly. This fly is like the genus homo, omniverous in his choice of vegetables. There is only one sure cure, viz., hydrocyanic acid gas, which to save you trouble to look up, I will quote formula once more: One pint sulphuric acid, one pint water; mix in one gallon butter jar. Tie up two and one-half ounces cyanide of potassium. Drop the little parcel of cyanide into the jar and walk on. Keep the ventilators closed tight all night. The above is for each 1,500 cubic feet of air space in your house. This strength will hurt no living plant, but might kill you or the cat if you stopped too long. W. S.

BLOOMLESS.

I have a plant of American Beauty growing in a dooryard four years without blooming. It has made a fine growth and is five feet high with several canes an inch around. Can I graft it to make it bloom; when and how? In the spring my verbenas get rusty and mildew. What should I do to prevent it? J. W. J.

This plant, if it is a Beauty, which I very much doubt, should have shown bloom long ago. It is just possible that it is a grafted or budded plant and the scion has died out, leaving the stock to flourish.

It would be much cheaper to purchase a new plant than to go to the trouble of grafting this one. Budding would be easier done and, as this is the proper season for that to be done, get some one familiar with the work to insert a few buds in the strong canes.

Verbenas will get both rust and mildew if kept in a moist and stagnant atmosphere of a high temperature.

RIBES.

SHIPPENSBURG, PA.

This season, with the exception of a short time earlier in the summer, has been very favorable to the growth of all kinds of greenhouse plants and hardy stock in the field. The rains have been keeping the plants moving along and at the present time the Byer Floral Co. says stock is as large as it was last fall when frost cut it down. The hollyhocks have been making such an amount of growth that some have been blooming with fine spikes of bloom. This we have never noticed before. The young pansies seem to delight in our cool nights and promise great things. Business has been very good indeed the past season. Everyone feels that we will do better next season.

The Wittbold Watering System

This Cut Shows a Row of Boston Ferns being Watered by the Wittbold System. The Same Line of Pipe also Waters Two Benches.

Greenhouse Work

Watering and spraying, but can also be used for outside work with best results. It consists of a combination of pipes and connections and tips so arranged that a continuous sheet of water the full length of house can be applied to a bench of plants and at the will of the operator can be directed upward from underneath the plants, downward from above the plants or parallel with the bench so that only the soil in the bench is watered. It can be used for syringing or watering. An entire house can be watered or syringed in only a few minutes. It is a permanent asset after once being installed, as it will never wear out, it is inexpensive as half-inch pipes are used and will save its cost in hose and labor in the first six months.

If spraying from overhead is all that is necessary two runs of half-inch pipe the full length of house, with connections, is all that would be necessary for a 25 to 28-foot house. Where watering from underneath is wanted a run of half-inch pipe, with connections, for each bench would be required.

If interested I would advise you to try a short length of my system, which would give you a better idea as to the work it will accomplish than I could explain.

Remember this system will save its cost in a very short time; it will give better crops, as water can be applied with such ease that watering will not be neglected. It will do better work than can be done with a hose, as an even amount of water will be given full length of the house.

Morrison, Ill., July 28, 1905.

MR. LOUIS WITTBOLD, Chicago.

Dear Sir: Sometime ago we put in one hundred feet of your watering system on trial and find it has given perfect satisfaction. Please send us five hundred feet more as soon as possible and when we can get to it we want eighteen hundred feet more to fit out our other houses. We think the system a very good thing and consider the labor saved by it will pay for the apparatus in one season.

Trusting that you will send the five hundred feet at your earliest possible convenience, we remain, Yours truly,

DAVIS BROS.

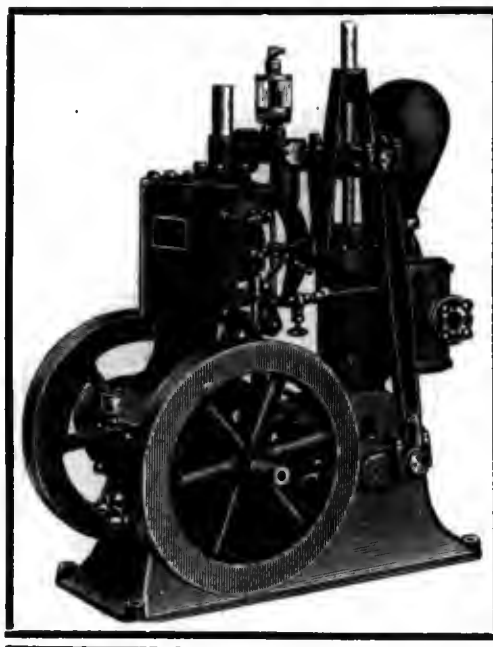
Milwaukee, Wis., July 26, 1905.

MR. LOUIS WITTBOLD, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: While at Chicago I saw your apparatus in operation and marvel at the short time it takes to water the entire greenhouses.

My houses are being erected now and upon their completion I will certainly call upon you to place some in my buildings.

As for a time-saver there is nothing to equal it in my estimation and anyone realizing its value will not be without your system. Yours truly,



WM. EDLEFSEN.

PIPING.

We have three houses running north and south. In our old system of heating the boiler was at the north. The houses slope to the south. We have five 2-inch pipes just under the gutters and branching off into 1¼-inch pipes under the benches for returns. They of course drain back to the boiler. Could we hitch our boiler to the south end of these 2-inch pipes and drop into the 1¼-inch pipes at the north end by raising them at the north and lowering at the south and get as good results? K. F. C.

I see no reason why you should not arrange the pipes so as to work satisfactorily in the way you suggest. It is not necessary that the high point in a hot water system be immediately over the boiler; in fact, it is well in systems where small pipes are used to have the highest point in the system at the point farthest from the boiler. The returns should, however, in all cases, have a good fall toward the boiler.

DON'T PAINT PIPES.

Our place is heated by steam and our pipes are close to the ground. They are rusted considerably and we would like to know if it is advisable to paint them with oil and lampblack. Or what else would you recommend for the purpose? W. F. C.

This question has been answered before, but it will do no harm to restate the matter. It is not advisable to paint the radiating pipes in greenhouses. Rusty pipes give off more heat than painted ones and the fumes resulting from almost any "paint" are very injurious to plant life. L. C. C.

Mitchell, S. D.—The Newbury's have completed three new houses, each 14x120, and have all their roses and carnations planted. They have also added a room 15x30 to the office.

Huntington, N. Y.—The Huntington Horticultural and Agricultural Society decided at its last meeting to offer money prizes at its next annual fall exhibition, which takes place in September. Liberal prizes are already being received and it is anticipated that the next show will exceed its predecessors in size and interest. Any offers of prizes should be sent to Walter Shaw, chairman of the exhibition committee.

CONCRETE WALLS.

Will you please tell how thick I will have to build a concrete wall in my boiler pit. The pit is 16x25 and eight feet deep? The material to be used is coarse river sand and cement. The pit will be without drainage, so will have to be heavy enough to stand the water pressure. Also please state the proportion of cement. J. H. H.

The thickness of the walls will depend somewhat on the surrounding soil. If you have good, firm clay, then six inches would be thick enough, but for walls eight feet high eight inches thick is better. I can inform you now that it is much easier to make a cistern and keep water in than it is to keep water out and you will almost certainly be bothered with water. Let the floor of the pit dip slightly to one corner farthest from where you intend placing your heater or boiler. There make a small pit, say twelve inches square and twelve inches deep, so that you can if necessary pump the stoke hole dry. If you are to use hot water you are wise to go down deep, but it would be money well spent to sewer the pit if it can be done without too much expense. If your heating system is to be steam you need not go down in the ground one inch.

Procure good quality of cement and use one part cement to three of sand. When this is mixed dry and then again mix with water, add another three parts of crushed stone or coarse gravel from which the sand has been sifted. No matter whether the crushed stone is in pieces the size of a walnut or the size of your fist, they will only add bulk to the concrete and not in the least lessen the strength of the wall. W. S.

FOR SEVERE COLD.

I have a greenhouse 18x60 feet, fairly well built, which I wish to pipe with 1¼-inch pipe to heat with steam to grow general stock where it frequently gets as cold as 36 degrees below zero outdoors. How should it be done and how large a boiler will I need?

H. F. C.

To properly heat your house 18x60 to maintain a temperature of 70 degrees during severe weather it will require a 2-inch flow pipe running from the boiler under the ridge to the most distant end of the house and there dividing by three 2-inch pipes to supply three manifolds arranged under the benches, each coil or manifold carrying five 1¼-inch pipes, or fifteen pipes in all, the length of the house. It will be well to place valves at each end of several of these pipes, so that they may be thrown out of commission during mild weather and used only during severe spells. Such a plant will carry about 400 feet of radiation, and to supply this a boiler with seventy-five or eighty feet of heating surface will be required. A seven or eight-horse-power upright or a ten-horse-power return tubular boiler will be large enough.

The Morehead Trap

RETURNING CONDENSATION

(Reprinted from the Florists' Review, March 9, 1905.)

I notice an article in the REVIEW of February 9, headed "Returning Condensation," in which it is apparent that the writer is surprised that high pressure and an automatic pump are not recommended to those who want the best system. I am surprised, after my experience with this system of heating, that anyone having experience should recommend it.

I first built two houses, each 150 feet long, and put the boiler down in a pit twelve feet deep, on a system recommended to me, the gravity system. I found that one-third of the pipes were always cold. The steam condensed in the pipes and water accumulated. The steam in the boiler prevented the water from returning until a large quantity accumulated, so that the weight of the water was heavy enough to overcome the steam pressure.

Then I changed from this system to a trap system. This was twenty years ago. That trap was so complicated that it was constantly out of order and I had frequently to get up in the night to repair it. The parts were so small that any little dirt that got in would clog it. From this I changed to the pump system. At that time the automatic receiver on the pump was not yet in existence. I got one of the best steamfitters to make for me a receiver, put a float in and attached the pump. The receiver he made was 3x6 feet, holding five or six barrels of water, so I was pumping cold water back into the boilers. This was not satisfactory and I was on the lookout for something else.

I found a trap that was guaranteed to be satisfactory. I have used this for the last five years and would not be without it. It has worked for six months at a time without any attention. We return to the boiler without any pump, and without any air cocks; the trap takes care of the whole thing. We use what some would call high pressure, but it is only from twenty to thirty pounds. With this pressure we have every pipe in the house of equal heat, the returns being as hot as the flow, 900 feet from the boiler.

We use twelve 1-inch pipes in a house 28x300, all flows, and eight 1-inch pipes in a 20-foot house. Each pipe is controlled by a valve. We can use all flows, one or twelve. We heat from the center of a 300-foot house, the pipes running each way, returns across each end returning to the boiler, these returns across the ends being the only returns. A check valve is used at the end of every 1-inch pipe before it enters the return, so that we do not have to open and close valves in the returns; all we have to do is to open and close the valve in the center walk.

Some claim that high pressure will not grow good flowers, but we find we can grow as good stock in one end of the house as in the other, and we do not find one end cold and another hot. With low pressure the farther ends of the pipes are always colder than the flows, or those near the boiler, while with high pressure the water comes back to the boiler at nearly boiling heat, requiring but little fire to convert it into steam again. With the trap system you do not have the expense of running a pump and keeping it in repair. Further, we do not require a boiler pit, as the boiler will work just as well on top of the ground as in a cellar.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." The following well known firms, some of the largest in the country, have tried all systems and are now using the traps. Our concern has 250,000 feet of glass, but the system will work just as well on a small plant if no more than 1,000 feet of glass. Peter Reinberg changed from pumps to traps and was pleased. Bassett & Washburn have let a contract for a new place, all traps. Breitmeyer's Sons, at Mount Clemens, were twenty-five feet below the surface with their boilers but have changed to traps. The J. D. Thompson Co., Joliet, put in a pump system at large expense, used it two years and changed to this system and would not change back under any consideration. Around Cleveland nearly all the florists are using traps.

This article is not written to advertise any trap. It is simply to help any one and every one to get the best system without a lot of expensive experiments.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Close of Washington Convention.

After the well attended and highly appreciated illustrated lecture by Oglesby Paul, of Philadelphia, on Thursday evening, August 17, the closing session of the twenty-first annual convention was held. As briefly stated in the REVIEW of last week, Mr. Craig, for the special committee, recommended that the society, through its officers and board of directors, proceed to hold at Boston, in March, 1906, a great and all embracing three-days' horticultural exhibition, provided a guarantee fund of $10,000 is raised at once. The committee reported $2,000 subscribed up to the time of the report and in a few moments another $1,000 was added, E. A. Moseley, secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission being one of those who asked to be put down for $100. The report of the committee was adopted and the work of raising the guarantee will be pushed at once, the idea being to get as many interested as possible by not permitting anyone to subscribe more than $100. After the successful outcome at the World's Fair flower show at St. Louis there will be no trouble about a guarantee fund.

The newly elected president was escorted to the platform and, after thanking the society for the honor it had done him, pledged that the best that is in him shall be expended for the society during the coming year. He asked the advice and counsel of the old heads and told the young men and the ladies that he should look to them for a banner attendance at Dayton in 1906, the selection of which city as a meeting place he said met with his hearty approval.

Vice-President-elect Altick, Secretary Stewart and Treasurer Beatty each were introduced and spoke briefly.

On motion it was required that each state vice-president appointed by the state delegations give an acceptance prior to January 1, 1906, or the incoming president be required to make another appointment.

On behalf of the committee on sports J. D. Carmody presented the bowling trophies to the winners, beginning with the Beatty and Kasting cups and other additions to the Philadelphia collection and ending with the nineteen ladies who secured prizes. It took about an hour to get through the list, the time being enlivened by the brand of humor peculiar to the gentleman from Posey county.

The committee on final resolutions thanked the people of Washington and the members of the Florists' Club for their unbounded hospitality, thanked the gentlemen and lady who had addressed the convention, specially thanked Messrs. Freeman and Cooke for their good work, thanked the government officials who had helped to make the week a pleasant one, thanked the Baltimore Florists' Club for its invitation for the next day, and for the visiting ladies thanked Mrs. Freeman and the Florists' Club for the special provisions for their entertainment.

President Vaughan thanked the society for its support and the consideration shown him by every member during the convention, and adjournment was then taken.

Death of Mr. Dake.

One of the sad events of the Washington convention was the sudden death of one of the exhibitors, Mr. Dake, a salesman for Brown Bros. Co., Rochester, who was present to push the sale of the Baby Rambler rose. While in the exhibition hall on Thursday evening he fainted and was taken to a hospital in an ambulance. He died within the hour and without regaining consciousness. His firm and his family were notified by Mr. Gude and a son arrived on Friday evening to take the body home. Mr. Dake was about 50 years of age. He was not known to many, this having been his first convention.

Friday's Features.

At nine o'clock Friday morning the society was entertained on the ellipse at the White House by a drill by the U. S. Engineer Corps, the courtesy being an exceptional one, for it was stated that not for twenty years has a review taken place on these grounds. After this exhibition most of those present repaired to the steps of the Treasury building, where a group photograph was taken. Many then visited other points of interest, especially the Department of Agriculture, where many very interesting things are to be seen, and at one o'clock a considerable number went to Baltimore.

CONVENTION JOTTINGS.

Washington weather has been maligned. The S. A. F. never had a more enjoyable week. Tuesday was hot—very hot some thought—but the next three days could not have been improved upon if made to order. It was comfortable in the daytime and so cool at night that wraps were almost a necessity.

One man was heard to complain, just as the ladies were starting on their trolley ride that he wasn't having a bit of fun; that the entertaining was all for the ladies (which was far from true) and that he was going to go on that trolley excursion at all hazards as there was nothing else to do. He was reminded that as a last resort he might attend the important business session just opening, but the only answer was a dash for the car. As a matter of fact, Washington offered too many diversions for the good of the business sessions.

The trade exhibitors made the complaint that, although they were this year permitted to keep the exhibition open during business sessions, they did not take so many orders as usual, as they did not see so many people. Of course the splitting-up of the show into three halls was a detriment, especially to those in the Masonic Temple, but the great factor was the desire of most of the visitors to see the city. Over 500 members registered, but only 292 voted at the election of officers.

One of the pleasant memories of the first Washington convention, in 1892, was the session at J. A. Freeman's store, after final adjournment, so when word was passed that a "melon would be cut" there on Thursday night, it brought a full house, men only. Along toward break of day angry female voices disturbed the quiet of many a hotel. Some guests wondered what it meant, but the wise ones only smiled.

When Treasurer Beatty was introduced with the new officers he received an ovation. Had he not endeavored to withdraw his name after the ballots had been printed he would certainly have received more votes for the presidency, for there is no more popular member.

However fully one may approve, so far as this case is concerned, the action of the convention in the matter of the election of a treasurer, it seemed to many an unwise precedent to establish. The ruling of the chair that a new election be proceeded with was a correct one and, although successfully appealed from in this case, will have to be sustained upon some future occasion, unless the constitution is amended, for the day will come when other candidates will fail of a majority of all votes cast.

LADIES' BOWLING.

The arrangements for the ladies' bowling was, like those for the men, all that could be asked for, the ladies' games taking place on the Y. M. C. A. alleys, August 17, where luncheon was served. Chicago, as at St. Louis, won first place, Mrs. Walter Kreitling having 275 to 274 for Mrs. F. M. Ellis, of St. Louis. The complete score follows:

SHOOTING TOURNAMENT.

The annual shooting tournament, under the management of Z. D. Blackistone, resulted in a victory for the Philadelphia team against the Washington florists, with a score of ninety-eight targets out of 125.

The winning team was composed of Capt. Anderson, Messrs. Edward Reid, William K. Harris, John Burton and Charles D. Ball. A beautiful silver loving cup, donated by Henry A. Dreer was the winning trophy. The Washington team was also awarded a silver trophy, donated by S. Desio, of Washington.

The championship contest resulted in a tie between Capt. Anderson, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Brown, of Richmond. Out of a possible fifty targets each made forty-five. Mr. Brown gracefully declined the trophy, a silver water pitcher, donated by H. B. Beatty, in favor of Capt. Anderson. A silver loving cup was presented to Mr. Brown.

The newly elected vice-president of the society, H. M. Altick, of Dayton, Ohio, won the third prize, a suit case.

The third event, a consolation contest open to all who had not won a prize, resulted in favor of L. B. Burdette, who after tieing with Frank Bailey, of Washington, captured the first. Z. D. Blackistone secured third place, and Messrs. Smith, of Philadelphia, Scott, of Buffalo, and Siebold, of Baltimore, each carried off a trophy. At the conclusion of the scheduled shooting a match shoot was held between the visiting teams and the Analostan Gun Club. The florists won.

Refreshments were served in the shade of the oaks skirting the range and Col. E. B. Hay made the presentation speeches.

A FEW IMPRESSIONS.

The twenty-first convention is past and now a memory. We anticipated great pleasure and were not disappointed. The bugaboo about heat was simply imagination except Tuesday being a little sultry. The remainder of the week was as cool and enjoyable as Portsmouth, N. H., perhaps more so. We scarcely think the attendance was equal to many previous conventions, certainly not the Washington convention of '92. The hall for the meeting place was of appropriate size. The president's address was crisp, practical and just the right length. As time rolls on subjects for papers of interest get scarce, in fact it must be a subject of vital interest and finely delivered to keep the audience in their chairs, and the time is not far distant when papers and essays will be ordered printed and the reading of them at the convention dispensed with. The papers on the "Ideal Employer" were well worth listening to and will read still better, all three able, and it is most gratifying to his host of friends that Mr. Skidelsky should win the first prize. It is only what we expected from this brainy man.

There was nothing of great importance came before the convention until E. G. Hill sprung the spring meeting and exhibition. This will mark an epoch in the history of the society. It is not a new idea. We have heard it discussed years ago, yet it never before found such suitable expression. We do not think that the society can have two popular meetings in the year and the August meeting will always be the popular outing. Yet the great exhibition, and great it ought to be, will bring together all the real standards of the business, young and old. We can see nothing to prevent an immense attendance of the public. A national horticultural exhibition is something the country has never seen. Our big fairs have pretended to hold great exhibitions, but they have been fizzles. Now here will be an opportunity to see the best products of the best gardeners of the country and it is in the hands of our leading men "with power to add."

Personally we are glad the convention is going to Dayton, O. We believe a small city is better for the health of the society than a large one, fewer outside attractions to scatter the crowd.

There promised to be a great contest over the presidency, but it flattened out and W. F. Kasting had almost a walkover. Mr. Kasting may not be as old in years as many of us, but he began very young to display tact, energy and enterprise and I know will put all the energy into the affairs of the society that he has into his own business, and that has been remarkable, and the next year of the society will find all its officers with plenty of work for their best ability and work. Mr. Altick is, of course, just cut out for his duties at Dayton. Through the unadvised good wishes of some friends of Mr. Beatty, we came very nearly losing the services of that gentleman for our treasurer, but all's well that ends well and his successor is not yet elected and we hope that Mr. Beatty will fill that office for years to come. It seems difficult to select any man who can fill the very important office of secretary, in the opinion of the very great majority, equal to Wm. J. Stewart and we think it a cause for congratulation that Mr. Stewart holds over in the coming important events of 1906.

Socially we had a fine time. That lawn affair on Tuesday night was beautiful and a president's reception within four walls will hereafter appear very tame compared to the fairy-like grounds. The music and refreshments suited all appetites. It was well conceived and splendidly carried out.

Never have the bowling enthusiasts had such spacious, cool and pleasant surroundings. From 1 p. m. Wednesday to the "wee sma' hours" of Thursday it was one long roll and anyone not knowing the location of the hall would be in no doubt if they once got within three squares of it, for the noises that floated out of the windows could only come from the lungs of the Chicago bowlers. We think the committee on sports did well to spread out the prizes to the greatest number both in bowling and shooting. Make as many individuals happy as you can. Philadelphia won out. It would have been a rare joke and greatly enjoyed if Washington had overcome that small margin.

A delightful, cool spot among the woods was chosen for the shooting and Mr. Blackistone ran off the events without a hitch. This shooting may be enjoyed by much fewer than the bowling, but it is rare sport for those who can handle a gun. It is much more scientific than bowling. It requires a cool, keen eye, an iron nerve and a get-there determination. We glory in the splendid shots that Philadelphia has. If it were not for them there possibly would be no shooting, but let a team from Philadelphia be matched against a team from the whole United States and then there may be some excitement. After suitable thanks were given to Mr. Blackistone and the shooting committee, Col. Hay, of Washington, was introduced to present the prizes. Now here was the oratorical gem of the whole meeting. Never have we heard more beautiful sentiments associated with our business nor more exquisite jokes connected with the prizes and shooting. Stenographically reported his remarks would be a jewel. The colonel should be annexed to the society in some form.

It appeared to us that the trade exhibit was equal in quantity and quality to any that has gone before and in splendid collections of plants perhaps superior, but unfortunately divided into three different halls and I am afraid some of them were missed.

Washington is such a grand and beautiful city no citizen of this wide country can afford to miss it. It seems to me that in a few years our people of fashion and wealth will all want to winter there. It may never catch up in population with half a dozen of the large cities, but for clean streets, splendid residences, majestic public buildings, beautiful parks it has no equal. There is only one Washington.

We only learn by hearsay, but on the best authority, that the trip to Baltimore as guests of the florists of that city, the ride around the parks, and more particularly the trip down the bay and the presentation to retiring President Vaughan, was the intellectual treat of the convention. Robert Craig's presentation speech and Mr. Freeman's remembrance to Mrs. Vaughan were nicely done. Judge Sands was brilliant, as he can be whenever he chooses, but the man wound up for the occasion was E. G. Hill, the Hoosier. A close friend of the latter said "Gurney was glorious." Mr. Hill is so full of hard common sense and serious business that you do not look for much Chauncey Depewism, but when he breaks loose, look out. We could not be there and visit Mt. Vernon. We got a cherry stone from the latter place from the tree that George didn't cut down. We should have got an intellectual treat and the finest soft shell at Baltimore.

J. Nicholas Lucifer Carmody made a fine sergeant-at-arms. His appearance inspired awe and obedience and it was a fine sight to see him capering in front of those ten maids and matrons on the stage.

Wm. F. Gude was on tap always on the right moment. His fine appearance and splendid voice has a powerful influence whenever he exerts it.

F. H. Kramer never sleeps, never eats, never ———, but is willing to keep it going as long as anyone will stay. He is a dandy, and all that the Washington boys were looking for was an opportunity to please the visitors.

That informal farewell in Joe Freeman's store was very happy and the way Joseph went through the cakewalk and several entirely new movements was much enjoyed. It was there in a thirty second duel of the Highland fling with the versatile Mr. Curran, of Elmira, that we fully realized how much we had become a "has been."

No one worked harder or with less bluster than W. H. Ernest, the chairman of the bowling, a right good fellow, and it went off without a hitch.

In conclusion we think few conventions will be remembered with greater pleasure. Some may look for more serious business, and some do not care for that end of it and look for simply a good time. We think the two elements are about happily blended and if you will notice the proceedings of other conventions you will observe that ours devotes much more than the average to the real business for which we convene.

Let us have a great and glorious floral exhibition in the spring of 1906 and we shall soon become nationally famous. Gardening was the calling of our first parents. It should be the highest achievement of ideal man.

THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

The joint committee of the S. A. F., Seed Trade and Nurserymen's Associations held a meeting at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, August 18. Harlan P. Kelsey, Boston, and T. B. Meehan, Germantown, Pa., appointed by the American Association of Nurserymen; F. W. Bolgiano, Washington, D. C., and Chas. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia., appointed by the American Seed Trade Association; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, and J. A. Valentine, Denver, appointed by the Society of American Florists were present. The following persons were also duly accredited as members of the joint committee: C. L. Watrous, Des Moines, Ia., from the Nurserymen's Association; Geo. S. Green, Chicago, from the Seed Trade Association, and Benj. Hammond, Fishkill-on-Hudson, from the florists, but they were not present.

The committee was organized by electing F. R. Pierson, chairman, and Chas. N. Page, secretary. After considerable discussion it was decided to co-operate on the following subjects, and such other matters of mutual interest as may be brought up for action or consideration from time to time:

Unite in striving to secure legislation which shall be favorable to one or more of the allied associations of seedsmen, nurserymen and florists.

Work for the defeat of legislation which would prove unfavorable to either association.

Try and secure favorable rulings in the custom house regarding imports of seeds, plants, bulbs, trees and horticultural merchandise and supplies.

Should Congress revise present tariff classification and import duties, to strive to ascertain what changes, if any, are desired by the trade at large and work for their adoption.

Secure as favorable classification and rates as

Display of H. H. Berger & Co., New York, at the Washington Convention, August 15 to 18, 1905.

are possible on all classes of freight and express matter.

To strive to do away with the government seed distribution by congressmen.

To secure the postal rate of $8.00 per 100 pounds on catalogues, pamphlets and other printed matter weighing two ounces each, or more, without affixing stamps.

To secure a convenient parcels' post system, both domestic and foreign.

We deprecate the giving of commissions to gardeners or others who have charge of making purchases for public institutions or at large private places, and believe that some plan should be devised to do away with this practice.

It was moved that a special committee, composed of one member from each organization be appointed by the chairman to consider the subject of graft or commissions paid to the agent of buyers and the chair appointed Messrs. Kelsey, Hammond and Page. On motion a committee, consisting of Messrs. Page, Pierson and Watrous was appointed on postal legislation. A committee on transportation was also appointed, consisting of Messrs. Meehan, Green and Pierson.

A resolution was presented, setting forth that it is the sense of the joint committee that each association should, as far as possible, appoint each year the chairmen of the three committees which are most concerned in subjects of mutual interests as members of this joint committee.

THE IDEAL EMPLOYER.

By S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia.

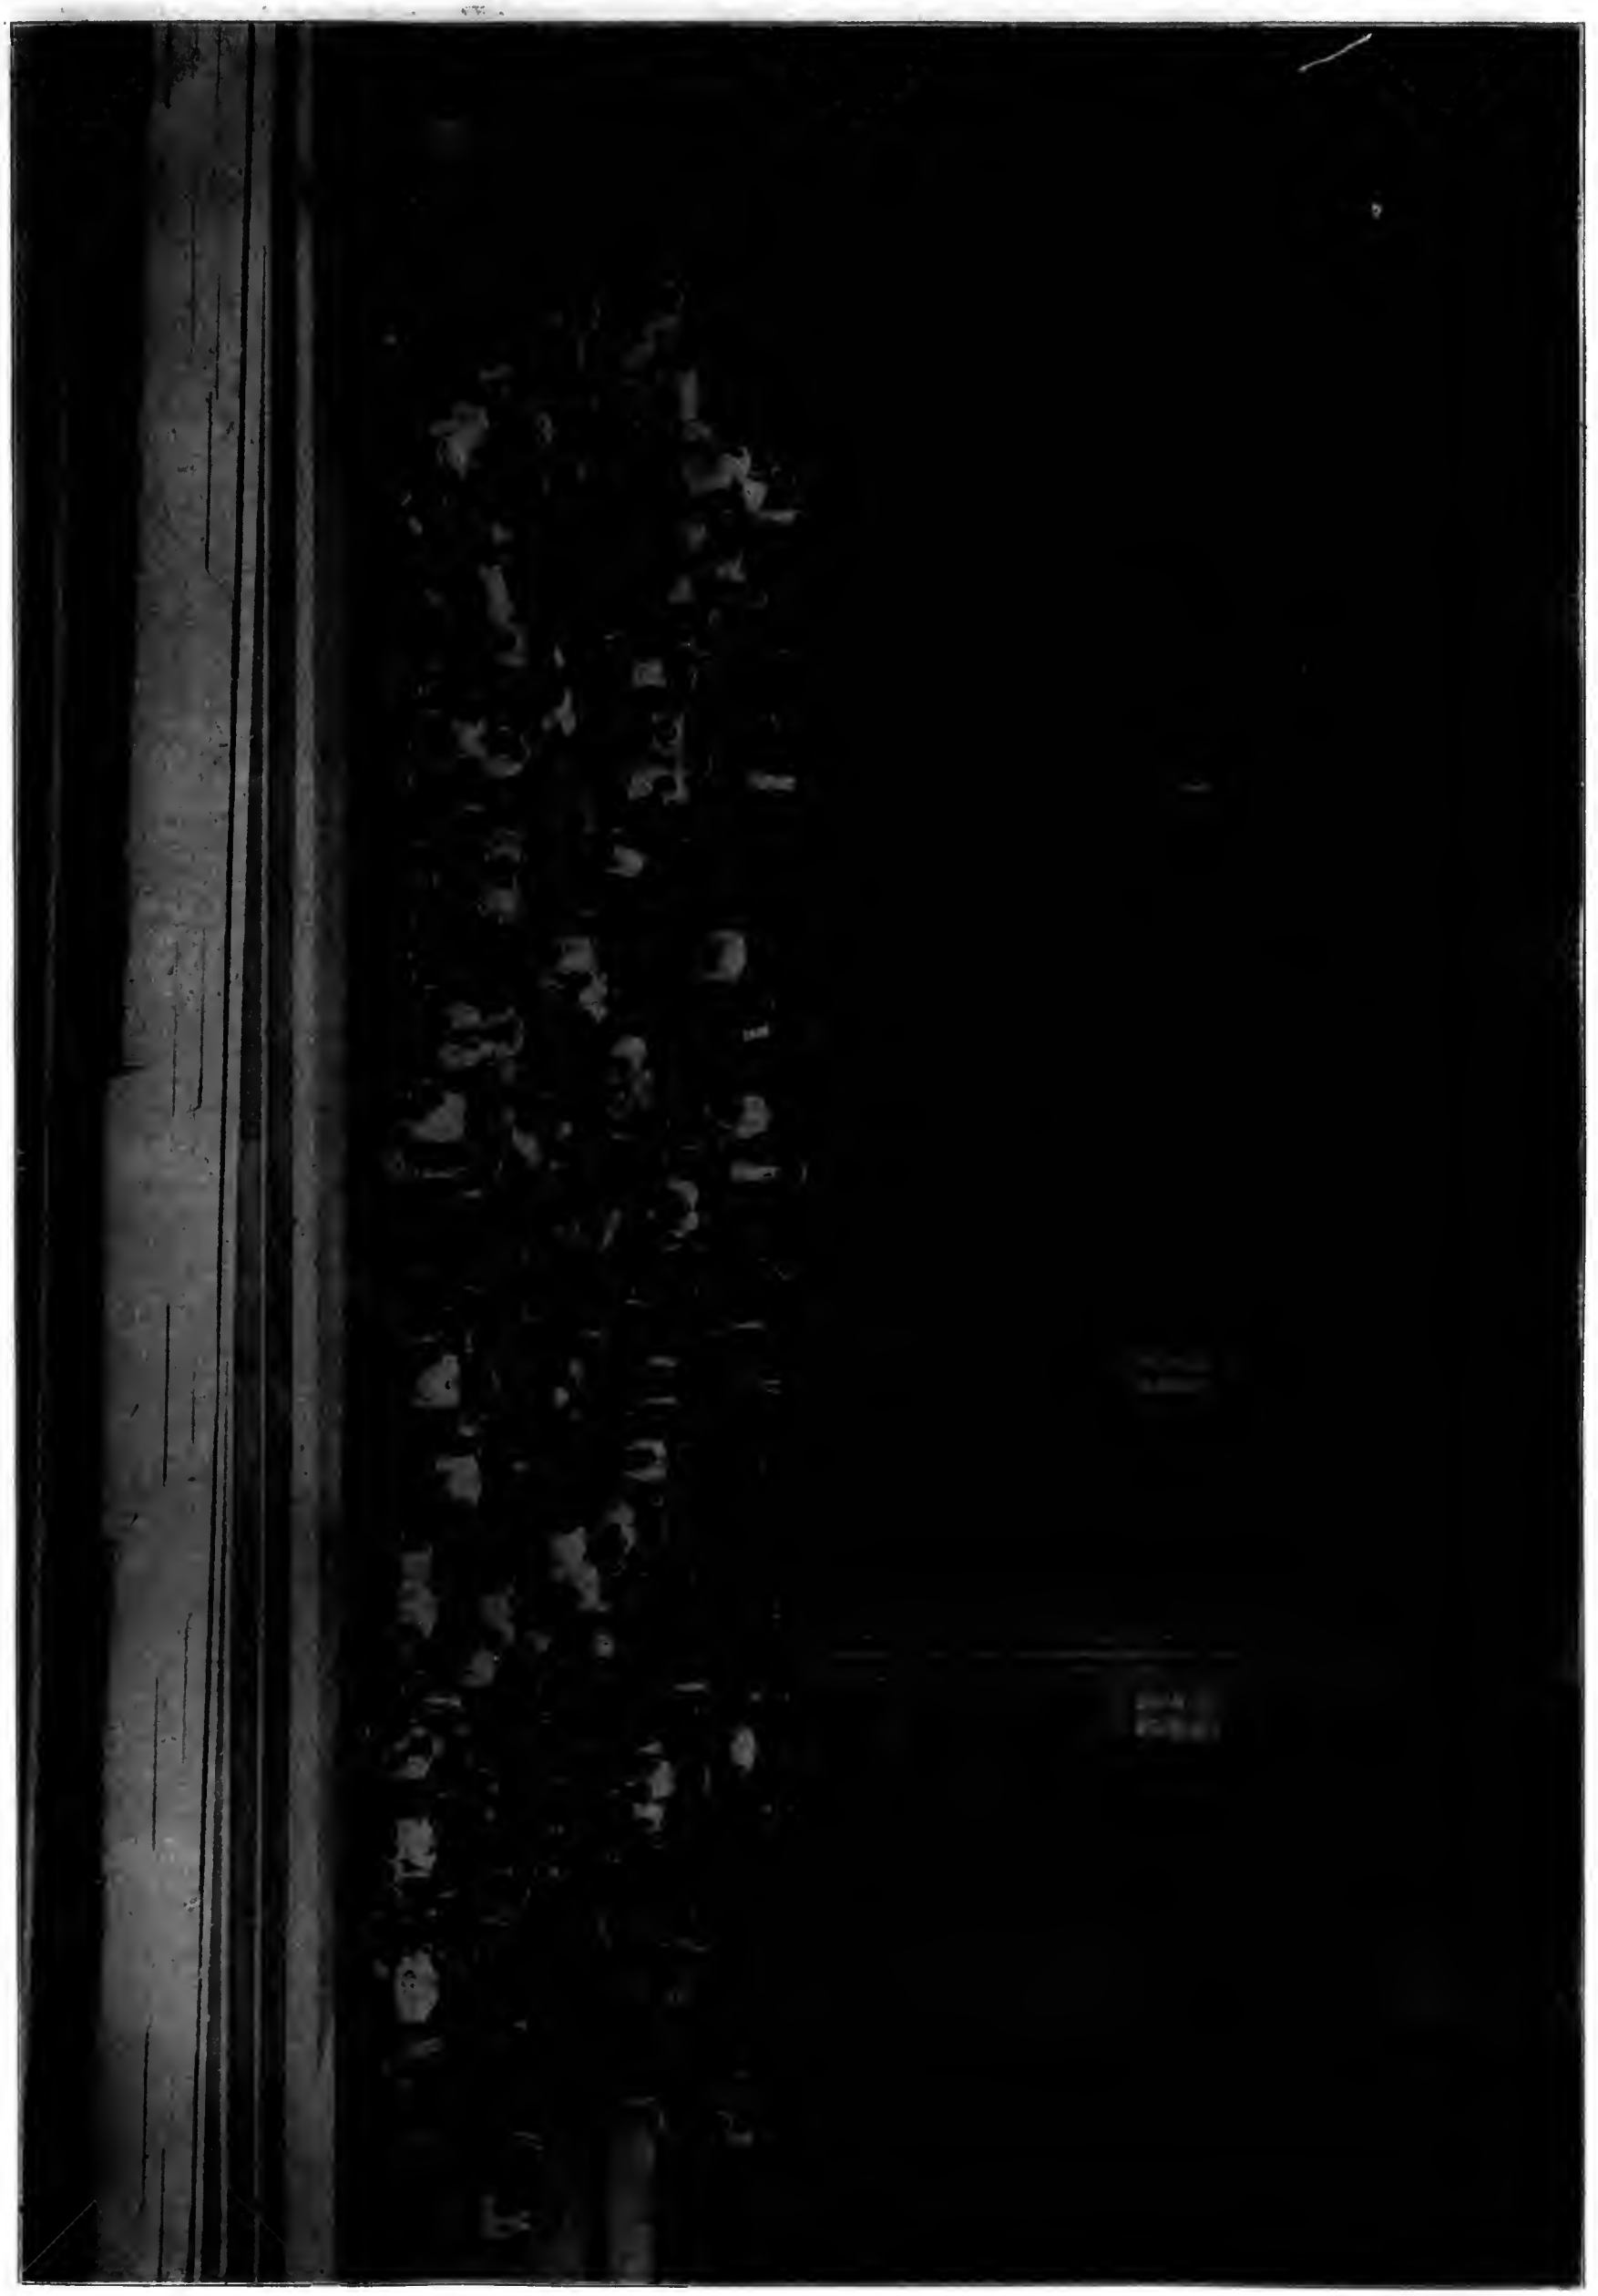
[Awarded first prize in the convention contest for the Beatty prizes for best essays on this subject.]

Our worthy president, Mr. Vaughan, in his very able and thoughtful paper on the ideal employee, which he delivered before the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists, at St. Louis, dwells with remarkable clearness upon those qualities which, in his opinion, constitute the chief requirements of an ideal employee. Like all successful business men, employers of labor, he seems to have a pretty clear and accurate idea of the kind of men that contribute largely toward the success of a business enterprise.

Men of the Garcia messenger type, knowing no fear, despising difficulties and defying all hardships, having but one aim and object in view—and that the achievement of success for their employer—such men, I say, are indeed ideal in the broadest sense of the word.

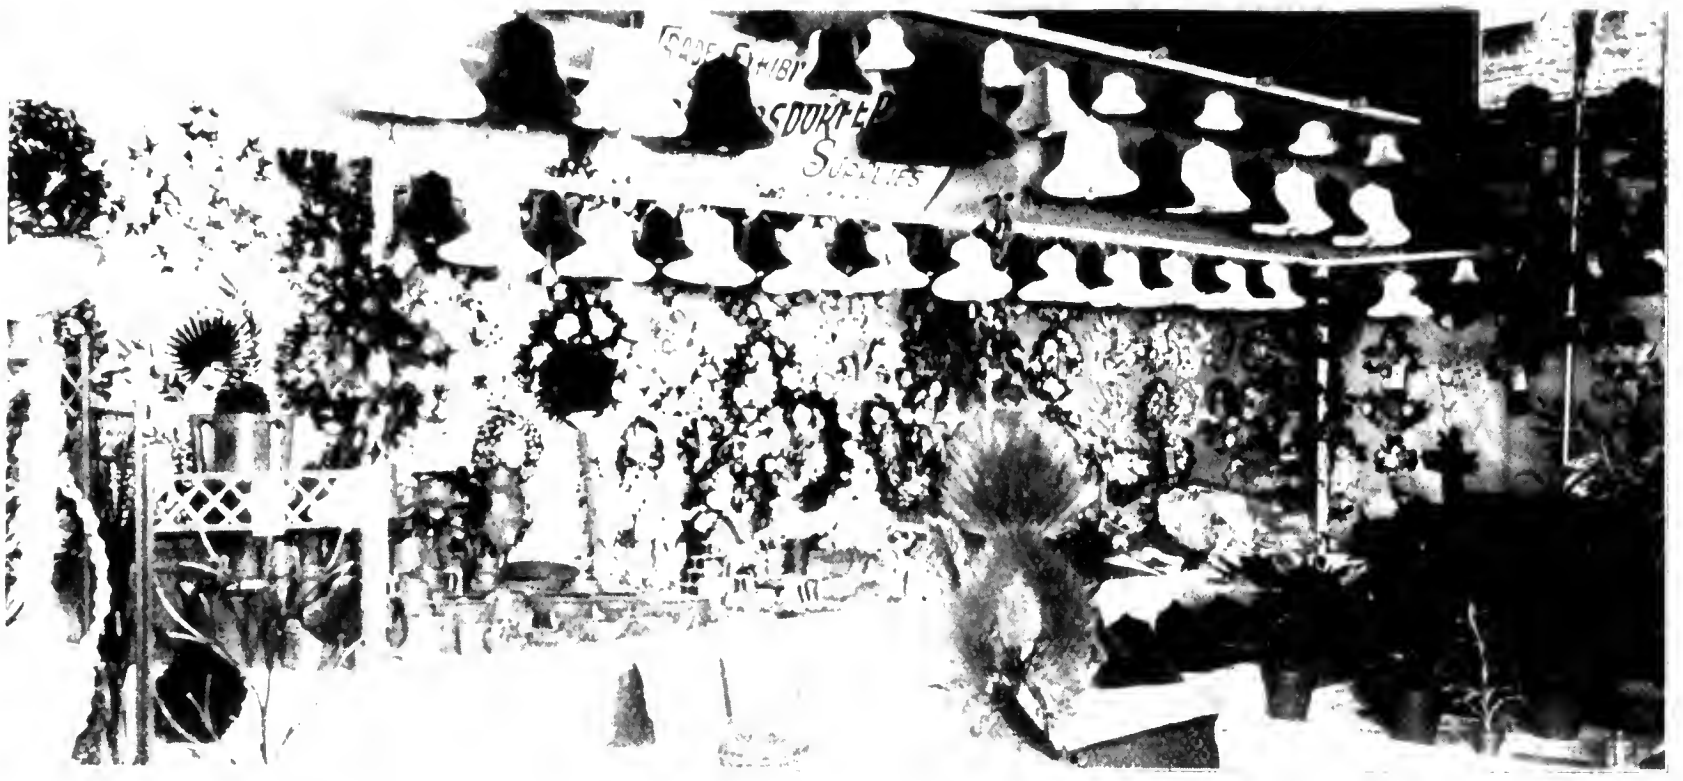
Granted, then, that such men are a blessing and are well worthy of their hire, the question naturally arises who is responsible for such unselfish devotion on the part of the employee.

In viewing the ideal employee, one must be sure to take a simultaneous glance at the employer himself. And this brings me to the question I have undertaken to answer, namely, What is an ideal employer?



Briefly stated, the ideal employer is a man of a broad turn of mind, of broad views, by nature an optimist, a man of lofty aims and aspirations, one incapable of a mean, selfish deed, whose domestic life is pure and chaste, who, in his relations to his fellowmen, is governed not by pelf but by that divine rule which prescribes "Love thy neighbor as thyself." The ideal employer is a man, who, aside from his business training, has imbibed those moral truths but for which our world would be desolate and dreary, a man who, like the late Geo. W. Childs, lives for the welfare of his fellowmen. When the Typographical Union of Philadelphia sent a delegation to Mr. Childs instructing it to impress upon that good man the needlessness of paying his employees more than their union schedule required, the worthy gentleman replied that his men earned all he gave them, that he did not intend to reduce the payroll, scale or no scale. Such men are indeed ideal employers, and it is with such men that the ideal employee is to be found. "Like master, like man," is a truth that no sophistry can shake.

Having defined in a general way the qualities to be sought in the ideal employee, I will now attempt, by way of contrast, to present a picture of the real employer. Far be it, however, from my intention to reflect upon the honesty and integrity of the gentlemen present, most of whom, I take it for granted, are employers.



The truth, however, requires me to take a pessimistic view of the aims and notions that govern some of our employers in their relations to their men. The grower who hires his man to look after his roses and carnations, seldom if ever gives him a thought beyond that of what he can produce. If the stock is creditable, well and good; else out he goes to make room for another man. On the face of it, it looks proper of course. Yet, how often do we ignore conditions and circumstances beyond the control of the best men? Good wages to the right man are paid as a rule, not because of choice, but because of necessity. I have often met men working from sunrise till sunset and late into the cold, wintry nights for a paltry few dollars per week. At last, when life becomes burdensome and a more suitable place is found at a higher wage, the employer is ready to offer better terms. Necessity, of course, has compelled him to "compromise."

Such is not the ideal employer. The "knight of the grip" or the man of the road is as happy as the proverbial lark when he can show "big results" and send good orders to the house. Fifteen below zero, or ninety in the shade, it matters not to him. Out he goes on his daily rounds, trudging along some country road in quest of business, faithful to his trust, like the trim soldier defending a righteous cause, hopeful and persevering. Somewhere in the great city of New York or Chicago, a little woman and little children feel lonesome, at times desolate and forlorn because of the absence of their bread-winner and protector. Things look discouraging and gloomy at times on the road, despite one's best efforts. At such times a word of encouragement would be welcome indeed, but here is a letter. "Get a hustle on yourself," it says, "you must do better." "Why don't you sell to Mr. So and So?" Results are wanted regardless of all circumstances. Those who read the letters of Mr. Graham, the pork packer, to his son, which appeared periodically in the Saturday Evening Post, can see the typical real employer. Mr. Graham wants no apologies, no explanations, he wants orders for pork, spareribs, lard, and—nothing but orders. Very laudable, indeed, but the ideal employer is not reflected in Mr. Graham.

The man or woman behind the counter toiling from morning till evening, and during the rush of the holiday season late into the night, finds no pleasure in the work if his or her efforts are not appreciated. Things are done in a half-hearted manner. On the other hand, be the employer of the ideal type, having the in-

Somewhere in the great city of New York or Chicago, a little woman and little children feel lonesome, at times desolate and forlorn because of the absence of their bread-winner and protector. Things look discouraging and gloomy at times on the road, despite one's best efforts. At such times a word of encouragement would be welcome indeed, but here is a letter. "Get a hustle on yourself," it says, "you must do better." "Why don't you sell to Mr. So and So?" Results are wanted regardless of all circumstances. Those who read the letters of Mr. Graham, the pork packer, to his son, which appeared periodically in the Saturday Evening Post, can see the typical real employer. Mr. Graham wants no apologies, no explanations, he wants orders for pork, spareribs, lard, and—nothing but orders. Very laudable, indeed, but the ideal employer is not reflected in Mr. Graham.

The man or woman behind the counter toiling from morning till evening, and during the rush of the holiday season late into the night, finds no pleasure in the work if his or her efforts are not appreciated. Things are done in a half-hearted manner. On the other hand, be the employer of the ideal type, having the interest of his employees at heart, a sort of enthusiasm is sure to pervade the establishment. I can cite instances that came under my personal observation. The kind-hearted master, who in the good old slavery days, took a fatherly interest in his human chattels, who fed them well, protected them, never abusing the helpless creatures, was the ideal master whose virtues are extolled to this very day by the old Southern darkies. Such a master seldom, if ever, had occasion to employ his bloodhounds in pusuit after a liberty loving negro. "Like master, like man." Faith and mutual confidence obviating the necessity of the lash, the bloodhounds and the vengeance of the slave.

The ideal employer is he whose interests extend beyond the narrow sphere of the counting room and the shop, who sees in his employees the man rather than the producing machine. Ever on the alert, ever watchful over his own interests, he realizes at the same time that the interests of his employer must be protected as well, that the one subserves the other, that one is impossible without the other.

It is a noteworthy fact that some of the men at the head of the great industrial establishments in the west, such as Procter & Gamble, of the ivory soap fame, and Mr. Paterson, of the National Cash Register Co., are approaching the type of the ideal employer. The schools, lecture rooms, clubs, hospitals, which these gentlemen have provided for the benefit of their employees, are most gratifying signs of an ideal state of affairs obtaining in those establishments. The result of these experiments prove most conclusively that each and every employee on the place takes a keen interest in the work at hand, regarding himself, as it were, as a part and parcel of a community, whose progress, as a whole, depends upon the good will and the good work of each individual member.

Mr. Paterson has indeed accomplished most wonderful results. His employees are a well-bred, well-cultured class of men and women. It has been well said, that no man has a right to demand that which he cannot give in return. The ideal employee, who, like Garcia's messenger, knows no obstacles and will face danger with the fearlessness of a true hero, must have a Garcia to serve. Admiral Togo won a naval battle, the like of which history does not record, because every man under his command found in him the ideal admiral, stern, exacting, and withal kind-hearted and considerate. On the other hand, the Russian sailors suffered defeat because the men in charge of the unfortunate fleet lacked the qualities of the ideal commanders.

To sum up: The ideal employer is, first of all, a moral man. Second, he is broad-minded and considerate. Third, he possesses in no small degree those qualities or virtues, commonly called patience and perseverance. Fourth, his own interests are inseparable from those of his employee; and fifth, he regards his business as a means, rather than end, ever striving to mould his life as his conscience dictates, even aspiring to live up to the golden rule, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

THE IDEAL EMPLOYER.

By Henry Eichholz, of Waynesboro, Pa.

[Awarded second prize in the convention contest for the Beatty prizes for best essays on this subject.]

This society being composed of men of various trades, as plant and cut flower growers or both, wholesale and retail dealers in plants or cut flowers or both, seedsmen, supplymen, noveltymen, builders of greenhouse structure and boilermakers, and last but not least ornamental horticulturists, I presume the subject must be treated to suit every employer.

First of all, an ideal employer must be master of his trade; he must thoroughly understand his business, as only under these conditions will he be able to judge work done and the ability of employees fairly.

Second: The ideal employer should have working capital enough to pay every employee promptly in full for all services rendered on days agreed upon, particularly paying for all overtime due the employees; for if you try to squeeze here and there a few hours, without remuneration, out of your employees, they will surely get square with you as soon as your back is turned, and you are the loser in this skin game.

Third: An ideal employer should in engaging men have a thorough understanding what is expected of each employee, and see that each one does his duty. Have all difficulties adjusted at once as sometimes a little misunderstanding may create, in the imaginary employee, dissatisfaction that can upset the whole working force.

Fourth: An ideal employer should always be prompt, if he expects promptness from his help; start promptly, quit promptly, and, if really necessary work has to be done before beginning or closing of day, pay promptly for same, asking no favors.

Fifth: An ideal employer should see to it that the Sabbath day is kept holy. Have only the most necessary work done, as a day of rest and recreation will put a better crew to work at the beginning of the week, and at the hand of your Creator you will be rewarded a hundredfold.

Sixth: An ideal employer should be reserved in manner, should show no favor, be courteous, polite, but always firm in giving orders and advice. Profanity is an employer's worst enemy; like a child imitates the ways and manners of a parent, so does an employee adopt the ways of his master.

Seventh: An ideal employer should encourage his employees wherever possible. There are many ways. Provide the best of tools for every work. Pleasant surroundings in workshop and homes. A word of praise where such is due will do wonders. Do not expect the skilled employee to also fill the place of the common helper. Have the trade papers and other trade literature where the men can get them at their leisure. Purchase the most meritorious novelties to stimulate the interest of your employees.

And last but not least, to be an ideal employer and have an ideal place of business, it is necessary to employ ideal help. This is very hard to find in this commercial age, and as long as no institutions are turning out ideal helpers, every employer will have to get along the best he can. By following the foregoing advices employees and conditions can be improved; as it is nine times out of ten that the employer is at fault for the condition of his or her business.

In closing I wish to say a few words to the florist section of this society in particular. If you are master of your profession, so that you do not have to rely on foremen entirely, but that you yourself can be at the steering wheel of your place, you will find that there is plenty of good help that, if properly treated, will do its duty. In employing florists be particular to get men that will work and harmonize together. If toughs or loafers slip in get rid of them the next pay day, for the good of all concerned. Good employees are generally eager to learn and if they see and notice your superiority and your ability, they will do anything for you and vote you the ideal employer.

THE IDEAL EMPLOYER.

By J. Austin Shaw, New York.

[Awarded third prize in the convention contest for the Beatty prizes for best essays on this subject.]

It is a grand privilege and responsibility to be an employer. A privilege because of the possibilities involved in opportunity to benefit one's fellow men. A responsibility because of the great obligation which rests upon one, to whom by birth or capital or mental strength has been given the power to lead men, and to maintain the homes and fortunes of those who give their best years, their skill, their faithful service in his behalf. The infinite source of strength, and consciousness of the account that must be rendered, for the trust given must never be forgotten if one is or is to be an ideal employer.

The thought of the highest, the purest and the best is always associated with the word ideal. It indicates the acme of things, the plan where there is always room—the top. To aspire to win the honor of that title is no unworthy ambition. To merit the confidence, respect, loyalty and devotion of those who toil in one's behalf, this seems to me to demonstrate the right to claim fellowship with the noble brotherhood of ideal employers.

One cannot be ideal in the true sense of the word, therefore, who does not come to the standard, first, as to character. A bad man morally, if he be perfect in all the other requirements of the honor, is unfit to be an employer at all. With good character as a basis, all else that is good and helpful may be built up into a perfect structure; and such a man shall stand before kings, and is a king, crowned with the love of those he serves, and building daily a monument that will endure through all the ages.

The ideal employer, then, with unsullied reputation, must next have a thorough knowledge of his business, in all its details, thereby commanding the confidence of those he leads, and ensuring their respect. Not only must he merit confidence, but he should invite it, for by so doing, he gathers new ideas, and strengthens not only himself but the man he draws upon, increasing at the same time his loyalty and encouraging him to further inspirations.

The ideal employer never forgets the golden rule. It should be the foundation of all his plans, his decisions, his enterprises. With this as the basis of his daily life he cannot make mistakes. The great unwritten law of whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap should be stamped in letters of fire upon his brain and heart.

There can be no escape from the reckoning that must be made when the sceptre is laid down, and the crown of responsibility is taken away. There is no escape from the balancing of the books, and there will be no excuse taken if the records are not clean.

The ideal employer must have within him an abundance of the milk of human kindness. He must be patient, considerate, gentle, slow to anger, solicitous as to the personal habits, health and family happiness of his employees. He must avoid undue familiarity, must encourage the proper use of spare time, inspire by example a love for study, healthful recreation, and good companionship and teach by precept and accomplishment the lessons of right living. He should be quick to detect and punish crime, and to discourage disloyalty by prompt dismissal of the offender. He should never stand in the way of an employee who finds opportunity for the betterment of his position, and should never make necessary a request for better wages where talent and achievement indicate the wisdom of the encouragement.

It is not having, but being, that makes the perfect man. Not the surroundings, the broad acres, the palaces; but the inner life, one's self that counts. The highest ideal is to shape one's life so that it may harmonize with the law of love. First knowledge, intelligence, then the consciousness of duty to those whose welfare is entrusted to our guidance.

The ideal employer does not live simply to acquire wealth. There is a higher goal never lost sight of, the happiness that comes from promoting the happiness and success of others. The law of love, which the ideal employer makes the guiding influence of his life, involves unselfishness, sympathy, brotherhood, generosity and justice.

The ideal employer invariably possesses the respect of those in his service. Conscientious, prompt, active, alert, he inspires others to emulate him.

Demanding loyalty, he wins it by his own loyalty to the interests of those who serve him. Honest himself, he asks no adherence to any policy that will not bear the white light of investigation into all its detail. He gladly invites sincere criticism. He is never unreasonable in his demands. He trusts implicitly and safely those who are worthy of confidence. If he is truly ideal no competitor can ever win the loyalty of an employee whom it is to his advantage to retain. He is always judiciously liberal; he does not forget the little mementos of holiday season, the solicitous and practical remembrance of those who by accident or illness appeals to his generous nature, the thoughtful inquiry, the little delicacies for the sick room, the tender sympathy, when the heart strings are wrung by loss of loved ones. No ideal employer ever withheld these tokens of good fellowship, or because of wealth or station, felt himself above the men who labor. If he be possessed of abundant wealth, he should see to the building of ideal homes, to the establishment of schools and libraries and gymnasiums, and to recreative parks and play grounds, and every convenience for the comfort and health of all whose lives are so interwoven with his own. His is a responsibility that may well give cause for serious thought, but if he be ideal, with clean life and clear conscience, as the fountains of his ambition and accomplishments, who can estimate the glory of his achievements and the value of such a life to humanity?

DETROIT.

Wm. Dilger, president-elect of the Detroit Florists' Club, was born in Sandusky, O., of German parentage. His father and mother dying when he was very young, he was adopted by a French uncle who had large interests in floriculture and vineyards. He was then twelve years of age and at the age of sixteen served one year at Parsons Sons Co., Flushing, and one year at Waltz's, Cumminsville, now Cincinnati. In the fall of 1876 he began business in Indianapolis, only to burn out in two months with no insurance. In 1878 he returned to Sandusky, where he built five greenhouses and added landscape work, which he followed for seventeen years. He then went to Detroit to build, or finish, the palm and orchid houses of Jos. Berry, of Grosse Pointe. In 1901 he was engaged as manager of the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange by Mr. Breitmeyer. Mr. Dilger is a regular attendant of the club and takes a great interest in its success. RAG.

WONDERFUL GROWTH.

The Baltimore American, speaking of the meeting of the S. A. F. in Washington and the entertainment of a large number of the delegates by the Gardeners' Club of Baltimore, has this to say of the wonderful progress that has been made in floriculture:

"Though commercial floriculture in the United States is nearly a century old, yet its development was very slow until the latter years of the nineteenth century. In 1825 there was scarcely any capital invested in greenhouses and gardens, except for the pleasure of the owners; in 1900 there were about 9,000 commercial florists' establishments, having an average of 2,500 square feet of glass each, or a total of 22,500,000 square feet. The estimated value of these establishments was 50 cents a square foot, or a total of $11,250,000. The value of the output was about $22,500,000. The retail value of cut flowers was estimated at $12,500,000, apportioned as follows: Roses, $6,000,000; carnations,, $4,000,000; violets, $750,000; chrysanthemums, $500,000; lilies and miscellaneous flowers, $1,250,000. The retail value of plants sold was $10,000,000. These large figures are for five years ago, and a fair estimate of the valuation of the commercial floral output for the curernt year would be not less than $30,000,000.

"Not only have American florists made their business successful and profitable, but they have encouraged a more widespread love for flowers among all classes of people. They have shown what possibilities exist for original work in this great field for the development of new varieties and for the enhancement of the beauty of the old. By frequent exhibitions given in all the larger American cities they have shown not only what they have done, but what others can do, by the exercise of the same intelligent skill and patient care. The country owes to these men no small debt, for through their business they have been able to add to the beauty of nature's products and to bring the people to a better appreciation of that beauty."

ECHOES FROM THE CONVENTION.

It is delightful to have one's prophecies fulfilled. Every one I made weeks ago about the Washington convention materialized, even the weather, that fickle jade doing far better than any of us hoped for. In fact after the first twenty-four hours of humidity not even the chronic kickers had a word to say against it. This was eminently a ladies' convention. Never were so many of the fair sex in evidence, queens every one of them, from "the queen of the S. A. F.," as Vice-President Freeman called her, down to the littlest lady of them all. I wonder if the handsome Altick will achieve such a triumph at Dayton?

The need of a large hall for the concentration of every interest at the conventions has been shown for the last time. Never will they be separated again. The lesson taught must bear fruit. No one felt worse than the Washingtonians at the dividing of the ways. There were many lonesome hours spent by the exhibitors in the Masonic Temple. "Don't let it happen again!" Dayton has an entire fair grounds ready for next year so we can all get together.

It was a young man's convention. All the officers elected are in their prime. The president and his vice are very popular with the fair sex. Half the delegates in 1906 will be ladies.

Bowling was never so popular. Cut out the sports and see how slim will be the attendance. Next year there will be more prizes and greater enthusiasm in this line than ever and yet it will be the greatest business convention ever held, for the most potent of attractions will be the meetings of the members.

Instead of uninteresting so-called lectures by youthful architects, let us have an evening or two with our own talented members in speech and song. What could compare with the eloquence of Craig, the humor of Carmody, the recitations of Beneke, stories of Gurney Hill and the music of Miss Fulmer and the Chicago quartet? There is no call nor room for incompetent outsiders with the talent in our own ranks to draw from. Let Brother Altick put this in his pipe and smoke it.

(Awarded first prize in the Beatty contest for best essay.)

The New York Clubites are good waiters. Lots of presidential timber in its membership. But no hurry.

The lady who took the prize for consecutive loyalty was Miss Perle Fulmer, of Des Moines, Ia., the songbird of the conventions. This was her eighth celebration without a break, but something is bound to happen some time and J. T. D. S. A. F. O. H. may not always accompany her!

As usual, the vote by the ladies on the New York train for the handsomest man on board went to an outsider, Mr. Bryant, of the A. H. Hews Co. Among the New Yorkers the vote was a tie between Traendly, Guttman, Fenrich, Julius Roehrs, Jr., Rhotert, Nugent and Totty. Lorenz and Louie Schmutz were among the also rans.

I never saw Sullivan, of Detroit, look so tiny as when he occupied the driver's outside seat of the eight-horse coach with Baby Foley, of Chicago. That seat must have been well braced, for it stood the awful quarter ton strain uninjured. Never did it hold so much good nature before.

Joe Manda recovered from his threatened attack of appendicitis in time to do his judging, with the help of mustard plaster without and something hotter within, but it killed the New York's bowling score and lost them the coveted cup.

Billy Kasting, the bowler, was too much absorbed estimating the probable votes of President Kasting Wednesday evening to do the sport and himself justice. Mrs. Kasting was the happiest lady in the hall on Thursday and her smile, let us hope, may never come off.

The noise at the bowling contest made by the wind instruments and cymbals and other things made one think of war and Foley can tell you what war is.

Seidewitz was just as good natured as ever after joining the also rans. What's the use?

When the New York Club sings "Johnny get your gun" next winter, Burnie will now be able to respond. He was not the only member of the club who carried off a prize!

If Altick will pull off a fat man's race, quarter mile, next summer and Bryant, Bayersdorfer, Ritter, Lonsdale, Sullivan, Kasting, Heinl, Hallock, Poehlmann, Seidewitz and Foley and all others over 250 pounds will enter, I would like to present a gold headed cane to the winner.

Ed. Winterson seems much toned down compared with the hilarity he displayed in the old days when he killed me in Detroit and he bowled 200.

Patrick Welch, of Boston, made a fine, impassioned appeal for justice to his absent friend. He never stabs a man in the dark.

F. C. Weber and his wife managed their European trip nicely so as to go home via Washington and Mrs. Weber took one of the handsome bowling prizes to St. Louis with her.

I wonder when J. A. Valentine will invite us to Denver? He has more to show us than ever New York or Washington can display. Those wonderful mountains are worth going around the world to see. I hope it will be Denver in 1907.

Lewis Ullrich takes defeat with the same genial placidity that he will display when victory some day perches on his banner. Everything comes to him who waits. Mr. Kasting can prove it.

Mrs. Samuel Henshaw tramped up and down the hills at the old bridge like a girl and the gallant Davis, of Orange, chaperoned her.

Mrs. Suder, of Toledo, was more like a lassie of 26 than 62. In fact she says the figures have been changed and the former are correct. She attended every meeting, reception and trip and was never weary. I prophesy she will be at the 1943 convention.

Everybody was glad to see William Scott again in good health and active in all his favorite sports after his severe illness and all wish him a long life and a renewal of his youth.

The ribbon men not only secured prizes for their fine exhibits, but the ladies declared the exhibitors were even handsomer than their display.

Harry Papworth escaped both the yellow fever and the railroad wreck and looked as if he was none the worse for the rocky road he had to travel.

A good many complained of lack of acquaintance with Washington water and so indulged too freely in it. Some found satisfactory substitutes. No serious illness developed except in the case of L. E. Dake, of Rochester, whose sudden death on Thursday was greatly regretted by all. The sincere sympathy of the convention goes out to his bereaved family.

The Canadian boys from Toronto and other cities even as far away as Winnipeg, Man., were warmly welcomed. Yearly we are growing nearer to our cousins across the lakes. Some day they will be our brothers. That is manifest destiny. Next year we should have fifty Canadians at Dayton.

For once Leuty didn't ride his bicycle to the convention. Perhaps he is getting ready to go to Dayton in his auto.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert M. Herr have still the youngest member along and he is getting a big boy now.

There was an unusual elation in W. P. Craig's handshake this year. In the early fall he marries Miss Mary C. Falsteth, of Philadelphia. Now you understand.

Some one broke a bottle of port wine in Manda's valise. After this came the attack of stomach trouble. But I didn't say Joe drank the wine.

Philip Breitmeyer and wife were as sweet and modest as if they were not building the finest florist store in the world.

Those Washington boys are wonders. Such devotion to everybody, such tirelessness and harmony, such accuracy and completeness of arrangement, such a souvenir, such unselfishness from Vice-President Freeman to the bottom of the membership list. Can we ever forget it all and their unvarying kindness, solicitude and devotion? God bless them. What would the year amount to without these annual reunions, important first of all in furthering the interests of the society, but best of all to most of us in that we see old friends again and clasp hands in loving welcome and farewell.

J. Austin Shaw.

SPIRAEA VAN HOUTTEI.

Spiræa Van Houttei is an excellent shrub for an ornamental hedge. It has been used for this purpose for a number of years and in every instance, so far as I know, has given the best of satisfaction. The plant is extremely hardy, even in Minnesota or Canada; transplants readily and grows in almost all soils and situations. The habit of the plant is graceful and beautiful at all times. When in bloom in June in this locality it is a perfect snowbank of bloom, hardly surpassed in graceful beauty by any other flowering shrub.

The California privet has been largely planted for ornamental hedges and in many localities succeeds admirably. On the Atlantic Coast, where the atmosphere is saturated with salt, few shrubs or trees thrive as well as under other conditions. Here the California privet flourishes better than most others. But in Indiana and other central states the California privet will not long survive. I have grown it here for more than twenty years, but do not know a plant of it more than three or four years old that is not misshaped and unsightly from injury by the cold. Much complaint has been made in the last year or two from various states on account of injury to privet hedges by the cold.

The illustrations show hedges of Spiræa Van Houttei in the grounds of W. H. H. Graham, on University avenue, Irvington, near Indianapolis, Ind. The hedges had been planted four years when the later photograph was taken. Such a hedge should be trimmed back soon after blooming in June. The general rule for flowering shrubs is to prune soon after the blooming period. Spiræa Van Houttei should be set eighteen inches apart in the hedge row. I prefer to use plants eighteen to twenty-four inches for a hedge. I have made successful plantings in both autumn and spring. E. Y. Teas.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Conditions in the cut flower market show improvement. The quantity of flowers coming into town is slightly decreased. The average quality is better and, most important of all, the demand has improved. Asters are very fine, a fact that is appreciated by the buyers. Dahlias are coming into greater prominence and bid fair to be an important factor very soon. There are plenty of good Beauties, a few nice Maids, some fine Kaiserins and an ample supply of excellent valley.

Convention Echoes.

The large delegation that went from this city to the Washington convention last week has returned in detached groups. All our delegates express great pleasure in their trip. The hospitality of their hosts was unbounded, everything having been done to make their visit pleasant and profitable. The success of the bowling team after a hard battle was a source of pride to their admirers. While not a great deal of business was done, the many exhibitors from this city feel that their efforts have at least sown seed on good ground. A very large number of visitors from other cities have been with us during the past few days. On one day alone there were seventy-five of them at the Dreer Nurseries, at Riverton.

There is one criticism on the management of the trade exhibits at Washington before the S. A. F. O. H. meets at Dayton next year worthy of consideration. Many of the exhibitors believe that it would be better not to admit the general public to the trade exhibit except on one day and then to charge admission. They think that the best interests of the business are not advanced by permitting curious crowds to handle and price stock only intended for florists.

Various Notes.

H. Bayersdorfer's newest importations are making a stir among the trade. His stoneware flower vases are creating a lively demand.

H. B. Howard spent Monday in this city. He spent the morning visiting many of the business houses and in the afternoon, accompanied by Mrs. Howard, called at the Dreer Nurseries, at Riverton, N. J.

Robert Kift states that he has concluded arrangements with the creditors of Joseph Kift & Sons by which that firm will pay ten per cent now and ten per cent in ninety days. Mr. Kift's friends are pleased that he has been able to make these arrangements to resume control of his business.

A. M. Campbell, with Ed. Reid, has returned from his vacation.

W. E. McKissick will open a wholesale commission house at 1221 Filbert street, September 4.

Mrs. Sarah I. Smith, of Secane, is sending exceptionally nice asters to the Flower Market.

M. Rice & Co. are very busy with the convention orders.

The Finley Acker Co. has opened its new flower store at Twelfth and Sansom streets.

Richard Umphried, of the Flower Market, enjoyed a trip to Boston by sea recently. He visited both the flower markets and a number of the beautiful watering places that abound near the hub.

The L. K. Peacock Co. has 130 acres in dahlias, which they think are finer than ever this season. Their annual dahlia show will be held at Haddenfield, N. J., September 10 to 16 inclusive. Phil.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

A visit with Mr. Howard of the Review in the wholesale cut flower district on Saturday last revealed a condition of cheerful and hopeful looking forward and a very optimistic outlook for the coming season so soon to make its advent. One thing Mr. Howard especially remarked was the uniform neatness and cleanliness of the wholesale stores. They certainly are all in a spick and span condition that makes a New Yorker proud of them and of the men who appreciate their business sufficiently to keep them so. Some of them are good enough for a retail business on a bon ton avenue. It would not be fair to particularize. The enterprise microbe has been busy with everyone of them. Look out for a wonderful business this winter; you will see the wheels in motion early in September.

Just now it is an aster and gladioli market. We couldn't see much else except the outdoor Golden Glow and Hydrangea paniculata. There were plenty of these to make many a decoration like Brother Gude's at the president's reception, where hydrangeas grew on evergreens. Some fine valley graced several of the ice-boxes and plenty of roses, such as they are, were in evidence, but one looked in vain for carnations and there were hardly enough orchids to corsage and buttoniere a single Newport function.

There is no pessimism anywhere and everybody feels and shows in his cheery countenance that "the worst is over." Most of the merchants and their lieutenants are back from summer outings with the brown glow of health on their cheeks and the light of ambition in their eyes.

Various Notes.

J. Nash celebrated his return from his three weeks' holiday by a trip with one of his growers, C. T. Darling, of Stony Brook, which was close to a tragedy. The impact of an auto and the horse and buggy was bad for both, but fortunately the gentlemen escaped with only a bad shaking up and a few bruises. These close calls are nerve thrillers and Mr. Nash shakes a little when telling about it.

Mr. Moore, of Chatham, who was in town Saturday, says that within four miles of his plant are ninety shippers of cut flowers to the New York market by the wagon express, which he calls a great success. But out of this list he also stated only two were members of the S. A. F., a significant endorsation of the necessity of some special method whereby the membership of the national society should be tremendously increased.

Thos. Young, Jr., is back from Europe and in splendid health.

Ed. Horan has been climbing the Catskills and looks better for his experience.

H. L. Ghormley arrived Monday from a beneficial month's stay in the Adirondacks.

Mr. Donigan, with Ford Bros., tempted the fickle goddess and imbibed two weeks of Saratoga water as a recuperator.

Geo. M. Garrett and wife, of Alex. McConnell's office staff, are resting in the Massachusetts hills and Myer Gottlieb, the artist of the establishment, has finished his coat of tan amid the coasts of Maine.

Mrs. Langjahr has entertained the stork and presented her husband with a boy.

Mr. and Mrs. Kreshover have had a very happy and successful two weeks at Saratoga. Few of us can pick five winners in a day.

Mr. Kilpatrick, of Walter Sheridan's office, left Saturday for his Vermont annual.

Troy is back from Bar Harbor and will soon start for Europe. Alfred Bunyard, formerly with Siebrecht & Son, has been added to the Rosary staff. The store when completed with its outside and inside white birch bark trimmings will be one of the most unique and striking in the city.

Business at Newport is now in full blast and all the available forces from the New York stores of Leikens, Hodgson, Siebrecht, and Wadley & Smythe have been transferred there for the anticipated boom of the next four weeks. If Russia and Japan will get together and then fraternize there, as now expected, the society village by the sea will have the gayest season on record.

Much sympathy is expressed for Harry Bunyard in his fight with his old enemy, rheumatism. He was greatly missed at the convention. So were many of the old regulars, Walter Mott and J. F. Wilcox among them. Let us hope we may all meet again in Dayton in 1906 with not a vacant chair. J. Austin Shaw.

A PRACTICAL HISTORY.

With practically nothing but an old horse to start with, and a large and healthy family to support, just twelve years ago Geo. M. Kellogg located at Pleasant Hill, Mo. Procuring under difficulties a small piece of land, he commenced gardening on a small scale, selling his products through the neighboring towns. He and his family being ardent lovers of flowers, he erected for his own pleasure a small greenhouse at a total cost of $75. He soon found that he could easily dispose of his surplus stock and, procuring as much money as he possibly could, he added to his one house two more. His neighbors gave but little encouragement; in fact tried to discourage his ambitions, telling him that he was sinking his money and breaking his back for nothing but loss. Regardless of his Job's comforters, and with the tenacity of a born fighter he worked along. Saving all he could without denying himself the necessities of life, he was soon able to add some more houses. Having the facilities for handling ice, he added that to his increasing business and made enough to purchase more ground and conducted a much heavier gardening business and by energetic and untiring zeal was fairly started on the road to success.

As time passed the demand for his stock grew to such proportions that he was forced to enlarge his plant to its present capacity and today he practically stands alone in his section of the country, having the largest establishment west of the Mississippi river, with several branches, all successful. To supply his large shipping trade his men meet all trains, day and night.

Today his greenhouses cover over seven and one-half acres of land and contain 300,000 square feet of glass and 100,000 more will be finished by fall. At present there are thirty-six houses devoted to roses, consisting of 25,000 American Beauties and a total of 50,000 of other varieties, including Bride, Maid, Golden Gate, Ivory, Meteor, Uncle John, Chatenay, Kaiserin and Carnot. There are fourteen carnation houses, containing 50,000 plants all benched by early August. The varieties are Enchantress, Queen Louise, Lawson, Gov. Wolcott, Moonlight, Lady Bountiful, Joost, Guardian Angel, Fiancee, Red Sport, Crusader, Richmond Gem, Cardinal and Mrs. Patten. There are five houses containing Marie Louise and Lady Campbell violets, with a few Princess of Wales and California. Three houses of chrysanthemums contain 7,000 of the leading commercial varieties. There are two large houses of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, one large house of smilax, four houses of ferns, such as Boston, Piersoni, Scottii and Tarrytown; one house of adiantum for cutting, one house of orchids and two propagating houses. He also handles about 100,000 bulbs each year.

The packing department is one of the most complete and up-to-date adjuncts to this modern establishment. The plant is heated by thirteen large steam boilers of 900 total horse-power and from thirty to thirty-five tons of coal is used each day and it keeps seven teams busy hauling coal during the firing season.

One of the Adjuncts to the Geo. M. Kellogg Place.

Connected with this he has two boarding houses to care for his help and employs from fifty to sixty men.

In addition to this extensive plant Mr. Kellogg has purchased 250 acres of land on which is located one of the most modern dairy farms in the state and as fine a dairy barn as can be seen in any state, caring for 100 thoroughbred cows, with two large silos filled to furnish feed during the winter months. With a chain of lakes running through his grounds he stores his ice and has a large trade in his and the surrounding towns.

His alfalfa fields are the wonder of the country and from them he cuts five crops each year. At Kansas City Mr. Kellogg has a well equipped wholesale and retail store and with a steady force of seven people finds it hard to keep up with his constantly increasing business. Mr. Kellogg's success is due entirely to his own efforts and shows what can be done by an enterprising, practical man with determination.

VERONICA RUPESTRIS.

This is one of the prettiest forms of this most numerous and widely distributed genus. There is some confusion about the name rupestris, but it is the established trade name. This veronica is hardy and should be in every hardy garden and will cover a large area if required. It grows but four or five inches high and in May and June is covered with spikes of handsome blue flowers, as the illustration so well shows. It can be propagated from seed, or more easily by divisions of clumps of roots in early spring, before much growth occurs. It will thrive in any ordinary garden soil. W. S.

The Market.

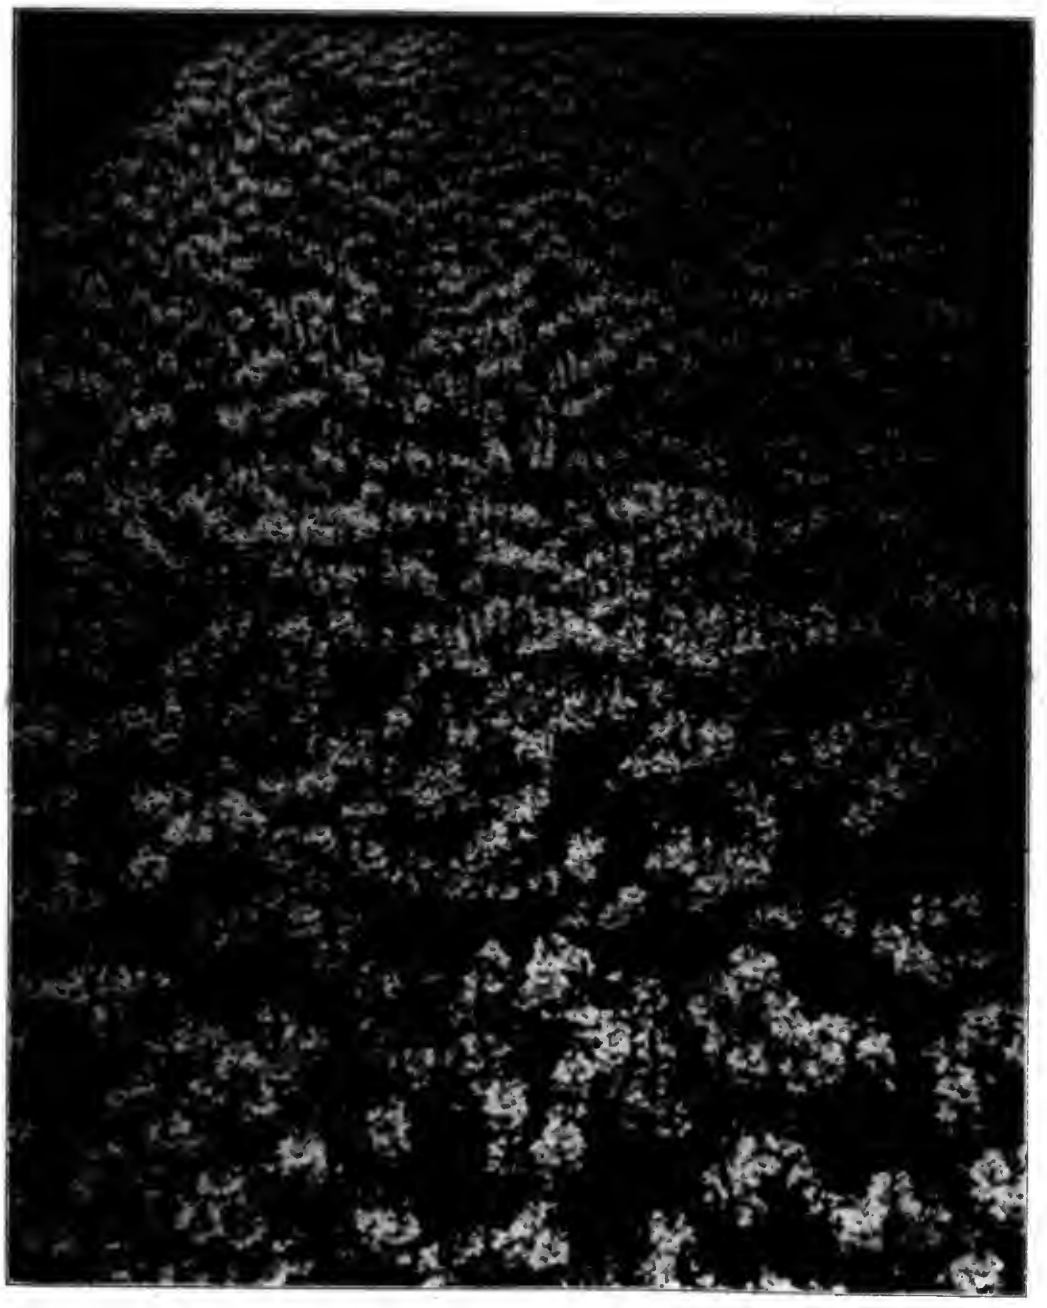
The market on Monday showed a little improvement over the condition experienced during the past two weeks. In some lines stock cleaned up better. Asters are not so plentiful as last week and only a limited amount of good ones are seen. The early varieties are about over and the late ones are just beginning to come in. Dark shaded gladioli are very plentiful, but those of lighter shades that come in find ready sale. Phlox and hydrangeas are very poor sellers and an abundance of both can be had and are only bought in quantity when in a pinch for white flowers. Mrs. Fisher carnations, largely depended upon for summer use, are poor in quality owing to heavy rains of late and only limited quantities come in. Dahlias and tuberoses are beginning to arrive, but are not much sought after.

Entertainment of the S. A. F.

Visitors to the number of more than 400 of the S. A. F. were entertained by the Gardeners' Club, besides the families and sweethearts of the members of the club. The drive through the parks and former burnt district was much enjoyed by all. In every omnibus were two or three members of the Gardeners' Club who pointed out the interesting features along the route. There were about as many ladies among the guests as there were gentlemen.

The visitors had a very agreeable surprise at Patterson park, where Superintendent Charles L. Seybold had planted an attractive emblematic design in colored bedding plants, forming two American flags, between which was a design with the lettering "Welcome S. A. F." conspicuous in highly colored plants. It was well done and the visitors heartily cheered when they saw it. The original program included Clifton park, but owing to the delay in starting from the stations, Superintendent N. F. Flitton, chairman of the committee, concluded it best to visit only the two parks and then through the former burnt district and to the boat, where refreshments were served. Quite a number of the club members assisted in waiting on the wants of the guests, especially behind the bar. Some of the members could handle the glasses as though they had been there all their lives.

A negro minstrel quartet was engaged for the occasion, besides Water's Fourth regiment band, which furnished music for the evening. The coon songs and cake walk will long be remembered. Dancing was enjoyed by many of the younger guests on the way down the bay, while in the saloon of the boat were gathered many to listen to the speeches of some of the S. A. F. members. Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, made a very entertaining speech. He ended by presenting Mr. Vaughan, of Chicago, in behalf of the members, a gold hunting case watch.



Vice-President Freeman, of Washington, spoke in high terms of Mr. Vaughan as president of the S. A. F. and thought the great secret of his success as a business man was the influence of a good wife and to show how the members felt he presented in their behalf to Mrs. Vaughan a gold crown set with diamonds.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., ex-president, said, "Our hearts go out in gratitude for the enjoyable occasion the Baltimore florists have shown us." W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, the newly elected president, also expressed his gratitude.

Wm. B. Sands was called upon to speak in behalf of Baltimore. He said Baltimore was the city of houses, not tenements, of schools and libraries and hospitals and beautiful women. He paid a glowing tribute to the city's history, where was born the immortal song of "The Star Spangled Banner." He pointed out the many things in the line of progress that Baltimore was first to introduce. He also spoke of her wonderful creations in floriculture, especially in roses. He said Baltimore had more than her traditions. She has grit and go in her yet. She is not a has-been, but is an is-er. Mr. Sands' speech was greeted with applause.

The committee of arrangements included N. F. Flitton, chairman; F. C. Bauer, J. J. Perry, Charles L. Seybold, I. H. Moss, Robert Halliday, William Fraiser, Robert L. Graham, J. A. Cools, R. Vincent, Jr., S. A. Seidewitz, P. B. Welch, H. H. Flitton, J. Boon and F. G. Burger.

The ladies' reception committee was composed of Mrs. Boon, Mrs. Burger, Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. Seybold, Mrs. Graham and Miss Margaret Graham. A. F.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Taken all in all, business during the past week has been quite satisfactory. Roses of good quality have sold remarkably well and have hardened in price somewhat. Carnations have also been in good demand, the best stock bringing prices almost equal that obtained in winter. Sweet peas are now of poor quality, having been spoiled by heavy rains. These will not from now on cut much figure in the market, although they will be seen for a month yet. There has been an abundance of asters of very good quality. Gladioli of desirable colors have sold well. Green stock remains about the same.

Exhibition.

Gladioli, phloxes, dahlias, herbaceous plants and annuals were the principal feature at the exhibition on August 19. For twenty named gladioli John Lewis Childs was first with an excellent assortment, the same exhibitor also securing first for 100 spikes arranged for effect. A first-class certificate of merit was awarded to Gladiolus Childsii America. For thirty vases perennial phloxes there was a good entry, but spikes were unusually poor, as is general here this season. Blue Hill Nurseries were first, T. C. Thurlow second, and W. C. Winter third. Dahlias made quite a big show in themselves, large collections coming from W. C. Winter, Mrs. L. M. Towle, W. G. Winsor and others. Mrs. Towle had some very fine seedlings. Robert Cameron, from the Harvard Botanic Gardens, had an extensive collection of herbaceous plants and annuals. C. W. Parker had hardy roses and Mrs. E. M. Gill a general display. There were splendid displays of fruits and vegetables and an unusually fine lot of fungi.

Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener, showed a well grown lot of bright Clerodendron fallax.

The last of the weekly shows occurs on August 26. China asters and herbaceous plants will be the floral specialties.

At the big September show opening on September 14 and lasting four days, hall space will be taxed to the limit. The schedule comprises seventeen classes for plants, thirteen for cut flowers, eighty-eight for fruit and thirty-six for vegetables. Some very attractive trade exhibits are promised.

Various Notes.

Returning delegates from the convention all report a delightful and profitable time.

Carnationists report a heavy demand for colored field-grown plants for fall planting.

Martin Wax, of Wax Bros., the Fremont street florists, had some fine fishing during his recent Newfoundland trip, landing one of forty-three pounds. By the tan on his face some would think he had been fishing around the equator.

Carnations are now mostly housed. As a general rule plants average smaller than usual.

Adam Shand, of St. John, N. B., will exhibit some fine seedling carnations at the A. C. S. convention in January. One is a dark pink similar to Nelson Fisher, and another a beautiful light pink in the way of Enchantress. Mr. Shand has a fine up-to-date establishment. At present Queen Louise and Joost in tile benches carry stems two to two and a half feet long. Roses, violets and chrysanthemums are all first-class.

The brown tail moth has spread this season over a very wide area. The gypsy moth has also shown itself over a considerably enlarged radius. Several nests of the latter have been found in the Arnold Arboretum recently.

The garden committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society visited the vegetable gardens of Col. Frederick Mason, in charge of E. L. Lewis, on August 22 and found them in superb condition.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club is arranging an attractive program for the next meeting on September 19. A large number of applications for membership will be presented that evening.

A company of twenty-five horticulturists were the guests of President A. F. Estabrook, of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, on August 17. Leaving Boston by special train, the party were met on arrival at Phillips Beach station by Mr. Estabrook and driven to his residence in Swampscott. An hour or two was delightfully spent in rambling over the extensive and well kept grounds and greenhouses. The head gardener, George Barker, had everything in fine shape. The recently constructed bowling alley was tried by some of the members. Lunch was served in a tent on the lawn in a charming manner at one o'clock.

In the afternoon the party was taken on a drive through Lynn and Nahant, returning to the Tudexo Club House, Swampscott, at five o'clock, where an elaborate dinner was served. The return to Boston on special train provided by Mr. Estabrook was made at seven o'clock. It was a day full of delight for everyone and Mr. Estabrook's generous hospitality was greatly appreciated. Among the members of the society present were: W. H. Spooner, Oakes Ames, W. W. Rawson, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, A. H. Fewkes, J. Woodward Manning, Wilfred Wheeler, C. E. Richardson, W. P. Rich and George Barker.

The Market.

There does not seem to be a ripple to break the calm of August business. July was a much better month in this market than is the average July, but August is not making so good a showing. In fact a number of the wholesalers report less business this August than there was last. The supply of stock has shown little change in the past two or three weeks. Since the receipts of asters became so large, there has been enough and to spare for every purpose. Of course, good carnations are hard to find and there are none too many good roses, but there are quantities of short and small Brides and Maids from young stock. The receipts improve in quality for each few days of cool weather, and deteriorate after each hot spell, and nothing particularly notable is to be looked for earlier than is customary. Beauties, however, are above the usual summer quality and a number of growers are cutting in considerable quantity.

The aster growers are complaining about the returns they are receiving, but this is almost always the case in the middle of the season. The early flowers sell well and, considering the condition of the carnation plants, it seems likely that the late asters will do much better than usual. Sales of gladioli are also very low, but for that matter the same thing can be said of practically all other items of stock.

The return of the convention party has done something to liven up things, but it is likely to be another couple of weeks before there is much doing in the market.

Delivery.

One of the features in which the wholesale cut flower business in Chicago has differed from other cities is in the delivery of goods. Here the buyer has taken his purchase with him, whereas in some other towns the wholesaler keeps one or more wagons for delivery purposes. But times are changing. In these days of over-abundant supply, when it is necessary to urge the buyer, it is common to hear the salesman ask, "Shall I send it over?" Or the wholesaler goes to the 'phone and tells the retailer of No. 19's fine dark violets just in, ending with, "Shall I send you 500?" One of the wholesalers calls at some of the greenhouses for the stock which he sells on consignment, and another has a wagon which makes deliveries on its way home. "Great oaks from little acorns grow," and if supplies keep ahead of demand it may not be long before every wholesaler will have to keep two or three delivery wagons.

Various Notes.

There has been comment that only one retail florist has thus far taken to the automobile as a means of delivery. Mangel has the only one in town. Others who have tried rented automobiles for holidays when extra delivery facilities are required, have found that horses make better time and are more dependable.

Peter Reinberg has dropped Flora Hill from his list of carnations planted in quantity this year. His principal white will be Boston Market, with Lady Bountiful second.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is planning to handle orchids and other specialties rather extensively this winter. They did very well on wild smilax last season.

Frank Oechslin, of the Garfield Park Flower Co., is busy preparing a stock of Christmas plants. He will be better supplied than usual.

Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Association is building three new greenhouses, using the King gutter and Foley roof material.

The wood purlin has passed. The right thing now is a ¾-inch or 1-inch iron pipe. The wood purlin is easier to put up, but the pipe obstructs the light less.

The retailers agree that this summer has been one of the most quiet on record.

Dan Branch his finished his new houses at Fifty-first street and is stocking them.

Everyone was pleased with the convention trip. The stop-off at Detroit was highly enjoyable and all speak in words of appreciation of P. J. Hauswirth as an excursion manager.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is receiving Killarney and Richmond roses from its plant at New Castle. They will soon have good stems, as the plants are growing well.

Percy Jones says that Frank Garland's prospects are excellent for the approaching season. His chrysanthemum plants are in fine shape.

L. Baumann & Co. are just in receipt of sixty-nine cases of florists' supplies from Germany.

E. C. Amling thinks that the prospects for the season now at hand indicate better business than last season. He has good reports on crop outlook for all his growers and thinks good stock insures good business.

Weiland & Risch are already planning for a new range of rose houses for next year.

J. A. Budlong reports having fired up in the rose houses in both July and August, to keep the place free from mildew and insect pests, the latter being exterminated by diluted nicotine extract put on the hot pipes with an oil can.

CLEVELAND.

There is practically nothing doing in the business line with the possible exception of an occasional spurt in funeral work, in which some retailers are quite busy. The variety of stock is very limited and if of good quality is eagerly sought after. Fine Kaiserins are still to be had in limited quantities at from 3 to 8 cents for extra specials. A few very fair tea roses and Chatenay are coming in from young stock. Asters and gladioli are in great abundance, the market being seldom cleaned up. Prices on these goods would not look well in print.

Various Notes.

I am pleased to report that the new rose, Richmond, is giving general satisfaction so far. A call on our venerable friend, A. Graham, who had just returned from Washington, found him much pleased with the growth of this new rose. His stock looks healthy and is quite vigorous. A very noticeable feature of this variety is its tendency to continually produce buds. In this respect and others it resembles Liberty very much, but if it produces as freely as the originators claim, there is absolutely no question about its future. Here we also found Gen. MacArthur doing splendidly. The tea roses look clean and healthy and the growth is strong. Carnations recently planted are looking excellent, standing up like majors, making ready for the winter's battle. Mums and other stock look equally well. When it is taken into consideration that all this is accomplished when they are in the midst of rebuilding operations it proves that there is a full-fledged gardener managing affairs. Two new houses have just been completed, with others following. The old plant looks more like Port Arthur after its fall than anything else imaginable, but wonderful to relate after being in use for sixteen years or more the sash bars are in almost perfect condition, being of the best white pine.

Mr. Graham had a narrow escape recently from a fire caused by spontaneous combustion. It happened in his coal pile. About two car-loads of bituminous coal were stored away when one of his sons found smoke emerging therefrom and upon examination found it on fire. A fire engine extinguished the blaze.

Isaac Kennedy, who recently assumed the management of the Essex Greenhouses, is getting his stock well under way for the coming season.

The convention contingent has returned and all are high in their praise of the way they were treated. Cleveland was fairly represented, having nearly twenty in attendance. The bowlers did not make a very good showing. Wait until next year.

We are well pleased with the selection of Mr. Kasting for president and all wish him unbounded success during the coming administration. The next convention city will be quite near home and great things will be done along the bowling line. FOREST CITY.

Bicknell, Ind.—F. C. Winter is making preparations to put up a large greenhouse here.

North Adams, Mass.—F. H. Pratt, the Ashland street florist, has purchased the greenhouses and land which he has occupied for two years. He will erect a large addition to the plant and install a new boiler. This is a very valuable and desirable location, as the main trolley line passes the door. Mr. Pratt is to be congratulated upon his good luck in securing it.

Zanesville, Ohio.—At the flower show given on August 16, in the Market house, the display of plants and cut flowers made by the children of the various schools attracted much attention. All the plants and flowers shown by the children were grown from seed given them last spring by J. D. Imlay. The affair has awakened so much enthusiasm that larger quantities of seed will be distributed next spring and another exhibition given. J. D. Imlay, R. A. Edwards and F. C. McCaslin made good displays and Thos. Goodlive showed some well-grown geraniums.

WM. FENDLEY.

Wm. Fendley, president-elect of the Canadian Horticultural Association, started in the cut flower business twenty-one years ago with the late H. Dale. After working for that gentleman for a few years, he started for himself, building a small greenhouse 10x12 feet the first year. The following year he built one more, 20x50 feet, growing carnations and violets and since then he has increased his plant every year up to the present time. He now has nineteen houses, averaging 200 feet in length, which are nearly all devoted to carnations and violets. Eight of these houses are the latest improved iron construction and all the up-to-date improvements, having cement sides to beds and glass partitions between every four houses. Some six years ago he became a member of the C. H. A. and has never missed a meeting, attending every session and, to quote Mr. Fendley, "Often thought I made myself too much heard by wanting to thresh out every argument that would arise." Mr. Fendley will make a good president and well deserves the honor that has been bestowed upon him.

FERTILIZERS IN GREENHOUSES.

The next most important of manures is the phosphatic class. We have seen that the present day guano is largely of this class of manure, so need only add that it may be used for either purpose.

The usual fertilizer of this class is some of the various preparations of bone. It is common to apply bone meal as a fertilizer, but being only slowly available it is not to be unreservedly recommended, as it is to supply immediate wants that we require in a fertilizer. Superphosphate of lime is the best to recommend and is made by the treating of either bone or some mineral phosphate with sulphuric acid, thereby causing a reduction of the tricalcic phosphate into a monocalcic which is readily soluble in water and which can be taken up by the plants. All the bone products are valuable as phosphatic fertilizers but in comparison with the superphosphate are slow in action.

Of the fertilizers used to increase the quantity of potash in the soil the one with which I am best acquainted is kainit, having used this in conjunction with basic slag as a slayer of ell-worm. But as to results, as far as this is concerned I am not prepared to state. One individual remarked the kainit tickled their tails and the basic slag chocked the ell-worms when they laughed. This is by the way. The manure is of considerable value, containing about twenty-five per cent of potash and is the base of sulphate of potash, which when pure contains fifty-four per cent.

Wood ashes are very commonly used as a means of supplying potash, but may be made of much greater value by mixing with organic matter and lime. During the decomposition nitric acid is formed, which combines with the lime. This again is decomposed by the carbonate of potassium (wood ashes) forming the nitrate. The whole mixture forms an excellent fertilizer.

In giving the various staple products offered as manures, I do not wish to imply that other chemical manufactures are not of value, for many are perfect, while none of those mentioned in this paper, probably excepting some of the fish refuse manures, could in themselves be considered to contain all the requirements of a plant food. It is only by the use of combinations that perfection can be obtained. As an example, liquid manure only containing nitrogen in solution, it is necessary to add phosphate to produce the greatest benefit. In fact, nitrogenous manures cannot be so readily taken up, if the soil does not contain phosphate in some quantities.

It is only by attention to the experimental side of the subject that we can become conversant with what is most required by the different plants and also by the various soils at one's disposal. A grower having a clay loam to work upon would not need to add potash, except under exceptional circumstances, while one with a sandy loam would derive considerable benefit therefrom.

In conclusion, as florists we do not take sufficient interest in the chemical composition of our working apparatus and if all are as ignorant of the subject of fertilizers as I find myself upon tackling this paper I would suggest that a course of lectures be delivered at the various clubs during the winter, thereby elevating the status of the profession above the grubber of soil.

HOW TO GROW NEPHROLEPIS.

[A paper by Joseph Bennett, of Montreal, read before the Canadian Horticultural Society at the Montreal convention, August 8 to 10, 1905.]

I suppose this question refers to the varieties of nephrolepis that we florists grow for sale, and commonly known as the sword or Boston fern and its sports. I do not pretend to be an expert on this question, but will tell you how I generally grow them.

In the first place, if you want to get up a stock, plant out some on a bench and let all the runners grow. You can get a large number of young plants from 100 square feet of bench. Use any ordinary soil with some grit or sand in it. Three inches of soil on the bench is quite sufficient. Don't shade the plants unless the glass is bad, and then as little as possible. If planted early in the spring you will soon get a lot of runners large enough to take off and replant in another bench, or pots if desired.

Having young stock ready, you must make up your mind whether you will replant in a bench or put in pots. If you use the bench just plant as at first, shade for a few days, and keep all runners cut off. By the first of September they should be ready to pot, and you can then make up different sizes by putting some singly in pots and some two or three plants together, according to sizes wanted. I think bench plants should be potted not later than the first week in September, in order to give them a good chance to get well rooted in the pots before being sold.

Should you decide to grow in pots instead of on the bench—and I believe you get the best results that way, though it is more trouble—put the plants into pots in similar soil, but be sure that the pots are well drained. I like to give a little shade to pot plants in very warm weather, as that prevents them drying out so much, also plunge the pots into ashes if possible, as it helps the plants by keeping the roots cool and also keeps the plants from getting upset by the force of the water when syringing them. It is very probable that your pot plants will look a little pale during summer, especially if they are in any way pot-bound, but that is very easy to correct. Give them a little fertilizer once or twice a week and the color will soon be all right. I may say that if you want to get good plants in small pots it is quite necessary to use fertilizer all the time after the pots are full of roots.

There are several sports from the sword fern. Piersoni I was much disappointed with the first year. I planted it out in a bench and when we potted it the fronds were so long and heavy that they broke with their own weight. Possibly I may have shaded too much and helped the above results. The second year I grew it in pots all the time and the result was quite different. I should strongly recommend this sort to be grown in pots and only planted out to get stock. Scottii is a variety which can, I think, be grown with success either way and will in time, I believe, give the Boston a very hard run for first place as a popular plant. With me so far it has done very well, but the color has not been just to my satisfaction. I intend trying to get it a nicer green with some "stuff" I have received from Toronto.

The variety Elegantissima is very nice for a private place as a variety, and perhaps to make a specimen of, but I question very much if any of the sports will oust the Boston from its present place, without it be, as I said before, the variety Scottii.

That is about all I know, and I will briefly sum up with this advice as to how to grow nephrolepis: Grow them in pots if you can give them the necessary attention, but if liable to be neglected plant them out on a bench. Give plenty of room and keep them well syringed to keep clean, and keep all runners cut off. Pot them as early as possible in the fall, as they ought to be well rooted in the pots before being sold.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Wood Lice.

If your houses are a few years old you may be troubled with a pest which is very common on old places. That is wood lice or sow bugs. These bugs are most common around any kind of decaying matter especially old rotten wood. While they are by nature scavingers, yet at the same time they do like to get hold of our young tender plants and chew them up. The worst time we have with them is usually during the first month after planting the carnations. You may notice their presence by the chewed foliage on the plants and if you do not stop them they will eat up all the plants. The best way to get rid of them, we find, is with Paris green and sugar. Any kind of sugar will do, but granulated will not get so hard as the softer grades, in case you have any left to be used later. Put the sugar in a box and sprinkle over it some Paris green, enough to give it a good light green color when mixed. Shake the box well so it will become thoroughly mixed. In the afternoon when the boards are dry and no more watering is to be done that day, go along and drop a little every few feet on the edge boards on both sides of the bed if possible. In fact drop some any place where you think they will get hold of it. They like the sugar and will leave the carnations for it. Don't expect to get them all the first dose, though, but repeat it until you can see that your plants are free from them.

About the first of September or when the plants have taken a good hold on the new soil you should begin spraying them with nicotine. If the plants are free from insects, especially thrips, one dose each week will be sufficient, but if you can see any thrips it will be well to go for them strong right away and get rid of them before the plants are making buds. Not only will it be easier to reach them when there are no buds, but you will save your early blooms as well. This is one kind of insect which is very stubborn and it must be fought relentlessly until it is got rid of, else the damage he will do you will be enormous compared with his size. You will find him especially fond of Mrs. Lawson.

We like the spraying much better than fumigating with smoke or vapor. It is more effective and can be done with the ventilators open, enabling you to do it toward evening or in the morning of the hottest days. In the winter it does not cause sleepiness of the carnation blooms like smoking, which alone will pay for the extract. Then again you can do your spraying and in an hour you can go ahead and cut blooms and no odor will cling to them, which makes it possible to do it regularly and systematically. When we used to smoke with tobacco stems we had a certain day for it and we tried to live up to it, but there would come a time when blooms were scarce and customers would want all we could give them the morning after the smoking day and would order them a day or two ahead. Of course no smoking could be done that day so it would be postponed a day, only to be postponed again and again until the plants would be in danger of being carried off bodily. We have seen this happen over and over and on many different places and while we know that it should not be, yet it is a fact and it did happen on the best places, too. With the spraying all this trouble can be avoided as it can be done regularly, and it will pay for itself many times over in blooms saved as well as in keeping the plants clean and healthy.

After the plants have taken hold and if there is no red spider on them you need not syringe them so much. In our vicinity when the days are warm and bright we like to spray them overhead in the morning and wet down the walks in the afternoon. This gives the plants a chance to dry off well before evening, but does not allow the atmosphere to become so burning hot as it would without the damping of the walks. On cloudy days of course this is dispensed with and only the dry spots are watered without wetting the plants. A. F. J. Baur.

NEW ORLEANS.

The gardening business is quite important in New Orleans. Perhaps no other city in the Union has so many gardeners attending to private places by the month and all the year around. In the north the lady of the house takes care of the garden. She cannot do that here, as the grass is too tough and the sun too hot. From a few who were in the business some years ago they can be counted now by the hundreds. Just now they are very busy. They charge from $1 to $20 or more by the month, according to the size of the place, cleaning the garden once a week. Some are satisfied to work by themselves, while many others employ several hands, and all seem to do very well in the business.

Chas. Ebele just came back from a month's trip in the north. He is well pleased with what he has seen at such places as H. A. Dreer's, Joseph Heacock's and Godfrey Aschmann's, around Philadelphia, and many others in other places. He says he found the business home as good as anywhere else. His two sons had charge of his establishment during his absence.

J. St. Mard is pushing his chrysanthemums. He is a good grower, having every year a large quantity of good flowers ready for All Saints' day. His plants are raised outdoors and covered with sashes when the buds appear. On another page you will find a view of how they look when ready for the market.

Armand R. Kerlec who was conducting a seed store near the corner of Decatur and Ursaline streets in this city, died last Friday from yellow fever. He was a young man, twenty-five years old, having succeeded his father, who was a Frenchman, who learned his business in the old country, and was employed at one time with the seed house of Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., of Paris. He was an enterprising young man and was helped in the business by his mother and sisters, they attending to the flower department. His mother had a stand of cut flowers at the French market for a long time. His death will be deeply lamented by his family, his friends and the trade, being a young man with a bright future before him. He leaves a widow and two children.

P. A. Chopin says business is just as good as can be expected for this time of the year. He is busy now giving the last touches to a pamphlet on flower decoration, cut flowers and flower designs of all kinds, to be distributed principally among his New Orleans customers. He wants to keep the New Orleans people well posted on what is new and fine in the art of using flowers and plants for bouquets and decorations. The book will be profusely illustrated and handsomely printed.

Frank Taisel will remodel his office in front of his greenhouses, making it modern and up-to-date. His stock is in fair condition.

All our growers seem to be full of hope for a grand display of plants at our next flower show in November.

About the water hyacinth I would say that it has completely disappeared in and around New Orleans. It was at one time so thick in the canals in the city that with a small plank thrown over a person could walk across, and in the bayous going to the gulf the navigation was almost stopped. No more of it can be seen now. I am not able to say that we owe its eradication to the engineer's office of the war department, but I hope that the marine hospital service will have as much success in destroying the mosquitoes, and then Louisiana will be all right.

CHRYSANTHEMUM QUERIES.

I am much pleased with the chrysanthemum articles published in the REVIEW. I have eighty-two varieties growing for the wholesale market in Los Angeles, and am not certain about the time to take the buds on some of them and on some I do not even know what bud to take. I am growing them out in the field in double rows alternating, with three feet between double rows and allowing fifteen to twenty inches between plants, and am growing three shoots to each plant. Occasionally I find a tip with a little mark down the side. It looks as if it had been cut lengthwise with a knife and causes the shoot to grow crooked at that part and I am anxious to know how to prevent it. I began planting in April and planted 1,000 each of Wm. Duckham and Enguehard during the first week in July. The ants (little ones) have killed some ten or twenty of the April plants, which are now five feet high, by working on the roots. What can I do?

Would I be expecting too much to ask you to give me information as to what buds to take and when to take them in this part of the country? If you are not acquainted with them all or have not got the time, why please do the best you can for me. This is my first experience raising blossoms for the market and I want to sell good, big, fine ones or none at all. How much ahead of the eastern season is that of southern California?

AN INFANT IN MUM CULTURE.

I have to thank "An Infant in Mum Culture" for an interesting letter on his experiences in growing chrysanthemums in California and in taking up his queries in an endeavor to assist him, if possible, I would say that I have no experience whatever with a California climate and cannot tell how it compares with the east. Possibly some grower from that state will enlighten us.

The bud question we discussed in these notes last week quite a good deal, and our "Infant" may perhaps find some information therein. I have given an approximate date for the list of varieties sent by him after which time it is safe to take the buds here and I do not see that conditions should be so very different in his case.

*Bud to take.—Late crown or terminal.

†Time to take bud.—As late as possible for late flowers.

All kinds may be taken on crown buds if crowns appear after date mentioned.

The question of which bud to take is not of so much importance as the time it is taken. The early dates given are all for early varieties and late dates for late varieties. Infant will probably revise his list somewhat as a wholesale grower for another year, the demand for kinds like Robert M. Grey being limited, but I think he is wise in not cutting down the list to one or two varieties because this narrows the market down to an immense quantity of a few kinds, whereas when the market is broader in range of color and shape, a glut is more easily handled.

The mark on the stem spoken of is made by a thrip which operates in the extreme tip of the shoot and is so small as to be hardly noticed. Spraying with To-bak-ine liquid or some other of the tobacco extracts will make things unpleasant for him.

Regarding the ants a good mulching with tobacco stems should, I would imagine, make things so warm that the ants would move out. If the nests are not too numerous boiling water should easily destroy them.

I understand that many of the chrysanthemums are raised in the open ground in California. Here in New Jersey outdoor culture even during the summer is virtually impossible owing to the number and variety of insects that infest the plants not to mention the rust that appears in wet seasons.

A LATE START.

We are putting up two small rose houses and will have them finished in a week or so. Is there any way that we could stock them with roses now so we could have them for winter? We have never grown roses, but know of course that the general stock was in long ago, but thought maybe there was some way we could manage to get them in.

W. T.

Very frequently it is impossible to plant new houses as early as is required for best results, but by planting strong young plants from 3½-inch or 4-inch pots early in August and giving good culture it is usually possible to get a fair return before the end of the season, but if planting cannot be done at once it would probably be better to give the space to some other crop for which you have a market, say lilies followed by bedding plants, which will permit a more timely start next season. H. O.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Joy & Sons Co. has secured a permit and will immediately begin the erection of a handsome two-story brick store at 209 Sixth avenue, North.

We Are Ready

The Market.

Business the past week showed considerable improvement. The demand was mostly for funeral work and it used up about all the stock that the commission houses received. The price steadied also, and in some cases increased.

The supply of roses was fair. The cut from new stock is increasing in quantity and quality. Beauties head the list and some really good stock is to be had. It sells first-class. Brides, Maids, Kaiserins, Gates, etc., all sell well and the price has advanced.

Some field-grown carnations are in the market, but there are but few that can be called even fair. They sold well in spite of bad quality.

Asters have been scarce and owing to the good demand for them the price advanced sharply. The prospects are for a heavy cut of them for this week, as the late varieties are being cut now.

There are some very fine gladioli in the market, but they do not sell as well as they did last year. Most of the time it is very hard to move them. Lilies are in good demand and fair supply. Other mixed stock sells readily. All kinds of green goods sell well and smilax was not equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

The floral exhibit of the Oakley fair was a great success this year from every point of view. The display of flowers was far in advance of that usually seen at county fairs. There was keen competition also and as $500 was offered in the various premiums, it was worth while. The awards were as follows: Best collection of plants, first, George & Allan; second, George Maguire. Best single plant, first, George & Allan. Best collection of begonias, first, Henry Schwarz. Best fern, first, George & Allan. Best geraniums, first, George & Allan. Best collection of palms, first, George & Allan; second, George Maguire. Best hanging basket, first, Henry Schwarz. JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

We are experiencing a fine growing season for plants, all stock outdoors being in splendid shape. Cool nights and occasional rains are well suited to perennials, which never looked more showy than at present. Hardy phlox fairly luxuriates here, making a glorious show in its varied colors. This is the home for hardy annuals; balsams, sweet peas, nasturtiums and the like flourish here as I have never seen them elsewhere. Asters look grand in the open. Vick's Snowdrift and Mott's Queen of the Market are the earliest whites, being in bloom July 15.

Chautauqua has had a good season. The floral displays eclipsed anything yet seen. H. W. Girton, of Ridgeway, had charge of the grounds. The lawns never looked better.

Two items worth special mention are the grand beds of tuberous-rooted begonias in the grounds of A. M. Kent, of this city. Each bed is planted in separate colors, making a long and continuous display. The other is a magnificent bed of Impatiens Sultani, a round bed about fifteen feet across the center, a naturally formed mound rising to about three feet, edged with Centaurea candidissima. It is most effective. Impatiens Sultani is one of our most common and desirable popular flowers. The bed described is in the garden of E. W. Jones, Celoron, where there is also a fine display of hardy aquatics, originally from Dreer.

Vegetable crops are satisfactory. Good seeds, rich soil and favorable weather are the necessary ingredients for a good crop. These we have with one exception, corn, which outside the early sweet

PREPARING SOIL.

The present is a good time to look to the turning over and preparing of the soil to be used for benches, etc., the coming season. The compost should have been got together some time ago, but should be turned over and well broken up now, so as to be in readiness when wanted. It is necessary that it be finely chopped so that the different ingredients are evenly mixed.

If barnyard manure was put in the compost at the time it was stacked up nothing else will be necessary for that part of it intended for growing lettuce, but for cucumbers and tomatoes the addition of some good commercial fertilizer will be an advantage. Bone meal or tankage (the latter a mixture of blood, bone and the waste from slaughter houses, which is dried and then finely ground up) we have found very good for this purpose. Either of these, added to the compost at the rate of about fifty pounds to the yard of soil, will make a good, strong soil and also has the advantage of causing the compost to heat sufficiently to destroy the larvæ or grubs of insects that would prove a detriment to the growth of the plants. The large, white grub of the May-beetle, which often proves a source of annoyance in greenhouse benches and is almost sure to be present in greater or less numbers in the sod, will not survive this heating of the soil, as they are soft and easily killed. Another advantage in mixing the fertilizer with the soil some time previous to using is that the heat will be spent before the compost is used and the heating has the advantage of so far decomposing the fertilizer as to render it in a state for assimilation as plant food sooner than it would otherwise be. When it is considered that the life of any forced crop is but a few weeks, it is apparent that the better fitted the fertilizer is for immediate service the more good the plant will get out of it and the less loss will result.

In benches or solid beds when the soil is not to be changed the same remarks practically apply, so that the present is a good time to dig in the fertilizer, so as to have the soil in the best possible condition when planting times comes.

ROOTING CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

Will you please give me some instructions about rooting chrysanthemums? I have never had any experience along this line and would be glad to know how to root cuttings in the open ground.

G. W. L.

It is now too late for propagating chrysanthemums for this year's flowering indoors or out, so it is perhaps hardly worth while going into the question in detail. While conditions in the south are very different to New Jersey, I think your correspondent would have much better success by knocking a rough frame together and putting this in a shady place and using a top made of burlap fastened to a framework of wood to protect the cuttings from the hot, dry winds than he would trying to root cuttings in the open ground.

The main thing in rooting cuttings is to keep them from wilting and this is difficult unless shade and protection are afforded. Make the cuttings about 3 inches long from the suckers that appear around the base of the old plant and after putting them in the sand keep sprayed over several times a day until they begin to form roots. NAME OF TWIG.

Will you please tell us the name of the enclosed twig, and how to propagate?

P. & P.

The enclosed twig is from a form of the hemlock spruce, Tsuga canadensis, either nana or parvifolia. The easiest method of propagation is by seeds sown in spring, either outdoors or in frames. Cuttings may also be rooted in a close, shaded frame, or the more uncommon types can be grafted on the ordinary Tsuga canadensis. Seed sowing is the best method of propagation, however.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

C. N. PAGE, of the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines, Iowa, was in Chicago for a few hours on Monday on his way home from the Washington convention.

THE proceedings of the 13th annual convention of the American Association of Seedsmen held at West Baden Springs, Ind., June 14 to 16, 1905, has been issued.

THE S. A. F. convention caught the New York seedsmen at a very busy time, main shipments of French Romans and many other bulbs coming to hand on the day of starting for Washington.

S. D. DYSINGER, who has been with L. L. May & Co., of St. Paul, Minn., for 22 years, has accepted a position as manager of the seed department of Sears, Roebuck & Co. This Chicago mail order house added a seed department to its business last spring.

REPORTS from the sections where cucumber seed is grown are to the effect that so far the fields look well and present indications point to an average crop. At this writing Long Green cucumber is the only variety that promises to be short.

A DELEGATION of Louisville, Ky., onion set growers visited Chicago last Saturday. They say the crop at Louisville is a good one as to quality, and not up to the average as to the number of bushels from a given acreage. They look for a good year, with prices advancing right along.

THE weather in the bean sections during the week has been reported good. A hopeful feeling as to the final outcome of the crop is entertained by most of the growers. If good weather will continue for two weeks more it will help things; unfavorable weather, on the other hand, would do more harm than could possibly be done at any other period of the growth of the crop.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

ANXIOUS.—It is not necessary to send to Boston for the beans. Those grown in Michigan will answer just as well.

BEGINNER.—Alaska peas can hardly be grown at so low a price as $1.25 per bushel. We would advise you to go a shade higher if you want the real thing.

SKEPTICAL.—If the man says he is a seedsman, that is no proof that you will get the worst of it if you buy your fertilizer from him.

INQUIRER.—We fear that the packet business offers little in the way of reward for a hustler. Your money would last longer if you banked it at 3 per cent.

FAIR PLAY.—Yes, we are of your opinion. The free distribution of seeds does work a hardship on those who fail to receive their package.

AMERICAN CLOVER.

The following is from a reeent consular report, written by the United States consul at Belfast, Ireland:

The United Kingdom is the largest single market for American clover seed, absorbing about one-third of the total exports. Of this quantity the largest portion is taken in England, but there is a good market for the seed in Belfast. The demand in the United Kingdom is irregular, being governed by climatic conditions. English clover is cut for hay in June, and the second growth is depended upon for seed. If the weather be favorable for the maturing of the seed the domestic supply reduces the import requirements, and vice versa. The largest imports are from the United States, the remainder coming from Chile, Germany, New Zealand, France and Canada.

As to the comparative qualities of the seed from the different sources, the English seed is regarded by English farmers as the best, as it is deemed larger, hardier, and is thought to produce the best plant. Chilean seed is regarded by the more advanced farmers as equal to the English, but it contains seeds of dock and dodder. The dodder does not germinate here, but the dock does. Canadian seed is held in high esteem, but the supply is generally small. In fact, Canada imports largely from the United States. German seed is regarded as inferior to English, but is in demand when the price is low. The ordinary French seed is the poorest of all, although some fine qualities are often available. In the estimation of British farmers, clover seed from the United States is better than that from France, but inferior to others. New Zealand seed ranks high, but the supply is small. The American seed is invariably so clean that it is highly esteemed, although small in size, and it finds a ready market.

As matters stand at present, the United States export trade in clover seed has most to fear in the British market from the Chilean product. The farmers of Chile, alive to the profitable nature of clover-seed culture, have ordered special cleaning machinery, constructed in Great Britain, in the hope of getting rid of dock seed, and thus overcoming the main objection to their product. The Chilean exports are steadily growing in volume. A few years ago Great Britain took only 3,000 bags, but this increased to about 12,000 bags in 1903, and 17,000 bags in 1904.

A Belfast seed merchant, who has imported large quantities of clover seed, states that American shippers should be careful to observe the "even-weight" system. Many simply fill the bags compactly without weighing. It would be far more satisfactory to consignees in the United Kingdom were all the exporters to follow the example of a Chicago company, which puts, by actual weight, 168 pounds in each bag. This seed is sold here by the hundredweight of 112 pounds, and each bag therefore contains one and one-half hundredweight.

The same authority reminds American shippers of clover seed that, while all may be graded as "prime," separate lots will differ in color and in size of grain. British importers, as a rule, buy by sample. It is complained that American shippers are not careful to make shipments and samples agree. For example, some farmers have a preference for a purple seed, while others prefer a lighter color. Knowing these preferences, the importer buys to meet them, and if the shipment does not agree in color and size of grain with sample, he has rightful cause to find fault, even though the shipment be entirely equal in quality to the sample.

This gentleman also expresses the opinion that American dealers do not pay enough attention to the foreign trade, but think too much of the home market. This is all very well when the supply is small and the home demand large, but not when the conditions are reversed.

There must be a systematic and energetic effort to promote the export business or Chilean seed will supplant the American in the British markets. This is too serious a matter for American dealers to pass over lightly. The rapid increase of Chilean exports proves this conclusively. British farmers say that American seed is not as hardy as English and Chilean, but this is probably a prejudice. A leading American shipper made a number of experiments which convinced many British dealers that American seed is quite as hardy as the English, but farmers here still adhere to their old belief.

MUSHROOM CULTURE.

Mushrooms are a paying crop when successfully grown. They may be grown in sheds, cellars or in mushroom houses especially constructed for the purpose, which are the best. The end of August or the first week in September is a good time to make preparations for making up beds. The material employed is fresh horse manure collected from the stables. It should be collected every day and spread out in thin layers in a dry place. Some shed or outbuilding is a good place to keep it until the required amount is at hand to make the bed or beds, as the case may be. Do not forget to give it frequent turnings so as to be kept in an incipient state of fermentation, for when allowed to rise too high the ammonia gets exhausted so then we lose one of the principal agents in growing mushrooms. When the manure is all got together, clearing it as much as possible of all long straws, add one part of good loam with four parts of horse manure. See that it is thoroughly mixed together. Make the whole mass quite damp. This is according to my experience a very important point in growing mushrooms and should not be overlooked. No matter how much care you have given them in other respects if the moisture is not under the mushrooms at the start you will not have a really successful crop, so see that the compost is moist before the bed is made up.

A good plan to find out if the manure is all right is to take up a handful, squeezing it tightly and place it on a level surface. If it remains intact and does not wet your hand you can safely say that it is all right. As to making up the beds, put the manure in layers three or four inches thick and beat down each layer with a mallet or brick as hard as it is possible to make it until the bed is ten to twelve inches thick. After making the beds should the heat become too strong make holes with a stick all over the surface of the bed to moderate the fermentation. The beds are to be spawned when the heat gets down to 90 degrees, and still has a tendency to drop, for brick spawn, or 80 degrees for French or loose spawn.

A few words as to good spawn won't go amiss. One of the chief reasons why there are so many failures in this business is that there is a large amount of lifeless spawn offered for sale. See that you get good spawn and you will get good mushrooms. Break the bricks in pieces about the size of turkey eggs and insert all over the bed about three inches deep and six to eight inches apart. Fill up all the holes and beat down with a brick again to make sure the bed is solid. Syringe the surface of the beds every day to keep the moisture from escaping from the bed. I don't mean to saturate the bed, only enough to moisten the top of the surface. When the heat drops to 75 degrees in the beds cover the bed with two inches moist loam and beat down firmly with a spade. Keep the temperature of the house as near 55 degrees as possible. In about six weeks the buttons should begin to appear. Make up other beds in succession. They can be grown very profitably from November to April.

Beds that are in houses where a temperature of 50 to 60 degrees is maintained should never be covered. It will cause the mushrooms to grow leggy, thereby reducing the weight, as the substance is utilized for forming the stem, but which under different conditions would go to enlarge the crown. Where steam or hot water is used moisture pans should be placed on the pipes and kept filled with water. All air should be regulated so that there is a circulation but no draught. Success in mushroom culture can only be achieved by close attention to all details in the different stages of its growth. J. J. F.

VARIEGATED VINCAS.

In the Review for July 27 J. W. C. asks for information on growing vincas. The remarks of W. S. remind me of a method practiced here which gives fine bushy plants to pot in the fall. In the spring we plant in the nursery rows any plants we have to spare for that purpose. Then as fast as we can get vines long enough we layer the tips about two inches deep, spatting the soil down on them closely. Each tip soon sprouts and throws up nice vines, which can be cut up for cuttings in the fall in the usual way. J. W. Myer.

PORTLAND, OREGON. — A scarcity of good flowers, except sweet peas, exists in this locality on account of another extremely dry season, and an unusual visitation of the cut worm or army worm. This pest has ruined both flowers and vegetables in places, but seems now to have passed on. Asters are very unsatisfactory this year.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Pleasant weather for a week and the improved condition of trade have caused the store people to look more pleasant, and they are much more companionable.

White asters have been scarce, but colored are in abundance and much improved in quality. Everything else except carnations is in good supply and improved quality.

Various Notes.

J. M. Gasser stopped en route from the convention, and spoke a good word for the Washington, D. C., people.

C. W. Hendicks, secretary of the Templin Co., Calla, Ohio, was another visitor.

We also had Mr. Dike, the representative of Jansen & Co., with us this week.

Ed. McGrath spent a very pleasant vacation with some variety about it; one week in New York and Coney Island, the other with some friends in a canoe trip of about one hundred miles on the Allegheny river.

Walter Breitenstein with a party of friends has taken canoes and gone to Salamanca, N. Y., and will come down the Allegheny river home, camping at night and enjoying the beauties of nature in a leisurely way.

Jas. Dell has just returned from his annual summer trip to the east.

T. P. Langhans, secretary of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., is back at his desk, looking much improved after his vacation.

Eddie McCollum, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, spent a couple of weeks up about Williamsport, Pa. He had his camera with him and some of the pictures indicate that his lines were cast in pleasant places.

Miss McKinley, of Randolph & McClements, spent a pleasant week at Niagara Falls.

The S. A. F.

A query among a little group of craftsmen was: Does the S. A. F. fulfill its mission, or is it simply an outing at a season when florists can best get away? There is no doubt of the necessity of such an organization, or of the good it could do, but does it accomplish its purpose? I fear not, after making diligent inquiry.

The society has just retired a man of great executive ability, who is above the average in business ability, who, no doubt, knew what would be necessary to make the society the real benefit to the craft it should be, but like all who had preceded him, he knew his office was conferred on him as an honor for one year and that little could be accomplished in that time.

But, would it not be wise now for our new president to take up the matter of the S. A. F. as an educator for the members who travel great distances to be in the convention city and instead have them travel to attend the convention, and then let him be re-elected from year to year, or as long as he did good work, or was willing to accept the position? There are many things which could be done along the lines adopted by our Wm. Falconer, who took a corpse and made one of the most lively clubs in the country out of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club. At every meeting he had something of importance to growers, either in plants, flowers, building material, or something pertaining to the business, and then an open discussion on their merits, methods of growing, etc., always having some one in sight who was posted on the particular point he wished to bring out. While this club has been made a success in this way, with these smaller things, they, with many other things, if discussed openly by the many intelligent men of the trade, would make a convention worth travelling miles to attend. Then let it be understood that you were going to keep the man at the helm who makes the S. A. F. a real live educator, and not throw away his year's work to honor a new man each year. Hoo-Hoo.

W. E. McKISSICK,
New Wholesale Commission House, 1221 Filbert Street, PHILADELPHIA, will open for business September 4, 1905.

SHADY BENCHES.

I have two houses. The south bench in each one does not receive any direct sun during the short days in winter. I wish to know what will grow best in them. I desire to put violets in one of the beds. Would you advise me to do so? Would lily of the valley grow in such a bench? R. C. E.

Some ten years ago we grew on just such a bench as you describe a fine lot of violets and picked fine flowers, and lots of them, from November to April. The other benches in the house were used for carnations and the night temperature was 47 and 48 degrees. The varieties we then grew, Scott, Daybreak and Silver Spray, did not need higher. Valley is a very different crop. If you had enough hot water or steam pipes boxed to keep the sand at 80 degrees and the top heat at 50 or 55 degrees you could force the valley all right.

We find in such benches, which are a mistake and should not exist in a modern horticultural building, that there is always something to occupy them. We propagate carnations or keep young plants of carnations and roses there. You can also plant out a lot of young nephrolepis at any time of the year. I presume this bench is only shaded by the partition wall that divides it from another house attached on the south. Where you are growing a mixture of bedding plants you can, with some discretion, find any amount of things that will do very well on such a bench. Azaleas would winter there finely if not too warm.

W. S.

Zanesville, O.—John D. Imlay will at once erect a modern three-story brick building on the site of his present store. The lower floor will be occupied by his retail business as soon as ready. The greenhouses are in the rear.

Auction Sale of Stalls of the Boston Co-operative Flower Market

MUSIC HALL PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

August 30, 1905, at 9:30 A. M.

The Boston Co-operative Flower Market has decided to open their market to the flower growers of the country and the directors take pleasure in announcing their second annual sale of stalls (as above date). To anyone wishing to sell flowers in Boston, we can truthfully say that we have the finest wholesale market ever opened in New England. The market is well lighted and ventilated, is centrally located both for buyers and growers. There are 14,000 feet of floor space. We have an ample ice storage room and parties who cannot sell in person can consign flowers to the manager or they can sell through an agent.

We have a five years' lease and all our patrons have expressed their pleasure with our market and we hope to have a large attendance at our sale. Anyone who cannot attend the sale can have a stall bid in for them by the manager.

FLOWER FASHIONS.

"The use of very large plants in decorations has fallen off," says an English contemporary. "Festoons of foliage and flowers have been more the fashion; of course there are some large plants used. The tall Cocos flexuosa, with Crimson Rambler roses, twined round the lower portion of the stem, and archways of roses are among the newer features of decorations. Much more cut bloom is now used in place of pot plants. The carnations on long stems in vases are always a great feature in decorations, and where pot plants of hybrid perpetual roses were used formerly, we now have the cut blooms on long stems. The tall table stands are quite out of fashion. Short vases with long-stemmed flowers are more natural and certainly more elegant. It is impossible to say what changes may take place in the future, but at present the tendency seems to be more and more in favor of cut foliage and flowers, rather than pot plants for all indoor decorations, and with suitable vases there is certainly much advantage in avoiding wet and heavy pots; but this of course may be carried too far. We must have some pot plants, and the tall palms with the pots covered with moss and flowers will always remain a necessity to well finished decorations."

MILDEW.

We have some rose plants which have a kind of white dust on them, and the leaves draw up and the plants will not grow. I enclose a cutting showing how the leaves are affected. I shall appreciate any information you may give me.

G. W. J.

These roses are suffering from a severe attack of mildew. Assuming that these roses are grown under glass, the most effective remedy at this season is flowers of sulphur dusted over the foliage. By adding to the sulphur one-third of air-slaked lime it helps to distribute the sulphur more evenly and also helps to release the fumes.

As a preventive give plenty of ventilation, both day and night, and take care to prevent any draughts and sudden fluctuations of temperature. Ribes.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

FALL planting is to be preferred for all hardy roses.

AMBOY, MINN.—E. Erickson, representing the Jewell Nursery Co., of Lake City, has been in this locality the past week.

PETERSON NURSERY, Chicago, reports a large amount of work in the landscape department. The west is rapidly developing in this respect.

THE Tamarix Africana seems likely to come into general use as a box edging. It grows to considerable height, but by hard cutting back it may be kept quite low.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—There was published in the August 12 issue of The Evening Wisconsin a very interesting letter from Alex Klokner on "The Shade Tree Problem."

MANY nurserymen now make their most determined efforts for orders for fall planting, feeling that routine methods will bring all the business they can handle in the brief spring season.

PEACH trees should be headed low. That is, let them sprout out near the ground and make several trunks instead of one only. This advice is specially applicable to the northern edge of the peach belt.

THE Forest Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture has begun a study of woods for special uses, and will this season take up cooperage woods, box and basket woods, vehicle and implement woods, and woods for street paving.

TROUBLE WITH RASPBERRIES.

Will you kindly let us know in your valuable paper what is the matter with the enclosed raspberry vine, also remedy? The plants make good strong shoots and then die. H. C. H.

The shoots forwarded have been attacked by anthracnose (Gloesporium venetum) which is quite frequently found on raspberries, especially the black cap varieties. On the red sorts, such as Cuthbert, it does not appear so frequently as on the dark variety Columbian, which seems peculiarly susceptible to this disease.

Spraying with Bordeaux mixture will mitigate the trouble considerably. Use four pounds stone lime and six pounds sulphate of copper to fifty gallons of water, making it in the regulation manner and applying another season ere the trouble shows itself. If serious give three applications during the season. It is now too late to spray, but badly affected plants should be dug up and burned and diseased shoots removed from the balance. If you are in the habit of applying barn-yard manure each year to the raspberries, change to fertilizer. Too gross feeding seems to be in many cases the cause of the trouble. W. N. C.

PIPING.

Please advise me as to the proper arrangement of pipes in a greenhouse 12x50. How many valves or stops are needed and where should they be placed? You advised 520 feet of 2-inch pipes, six lines on one side and five on the other in two manifolds. Where should the expansion tank be placed, at boiler end or remote, and at what end the manifolds? Must all the pipes run across the narrow end of the house back to the boiler?

G. W. L.

Your letter would indicate that an earlier answer had been given to a part of your question at least. As you do not state the temperature you wish to maintain in your house it is difficult to give a definite answer. If you wish to maintain a temperature of 70 degrees then from 500 to 520 feet of 2-inch piping should be used; if 60 degrees is desired nine lines of 2-inch pipe will be sufficient. If ten lines of pipe are used and arranged in two manifolds of five pipes each I think it would be wise to place gate valves at each end of two of the lines of pipe in each manifold. The expansion tank is most effective when connected with the main return near the boiler and so placed that it is from 10 to 15 feet above the highest point in the system. The returns can be carried into a manifold which can be connected with the boiler by means of a single pipe. It is not necessary that they all be carried across the house to the boiler.

One of the most satisfactory arrangements for the pipe in your house would be to run a 2-inch riser from the boiler under the ridge to the most distant end of the house, there divide it, using two 2-inch pipes to supply two manifolds, one on each side wall or under each side bench, each manifold to have four 2-inch pipes. At the other end of the house, i. e., nearest the boiler, each of these coils of four pipes can be brought together into a common 2-inch pipe which shall be connected directly to the main return to the boiler.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

There is no advancement in business and quietness reigns supreme. The weather continues cold and flowers are about as good as at any time during the season. Asters are in their prime at present and the best long-stemmed flowers do not cost the retailers over $1.50 per hundred. Smaller flowers with shorter stems can be had at almost any price. Roses are the scarcest flowers we handle at present, but of carnations there is a fair supply. Lilium album and rubrum are seen everywhere and are good sellers. Amaryllis does not seem to sell as well as in former years, and they are being offered in any quantity at from $1.50 to $2 per hundred.

Various Notes.

Advices from F. Ludemann, now in Europe, indicate that he will not arrive in California before the middle of October.

Alfred Pouyal, the Polk street florist, failed this week. Liabilities about $3,500, owed to various wholesalers in and around San Francisco.

Ralph Clarke has returned from his visit to Portland, Ore., and reports a very pleasant trip.

Mrs. Marie Pouyal, one of San Francisco's pioneer florists, died on August 13, aged forty-six years. She was the mother of Alfred Pouyal, of Polk street.

L. S. Denton, formerly associated with D. Raymond, the San Jose pottery man, has started in business for himself and will make a specialty of flower pots and seed pans.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, is erecting another fern house 25x100 feet.

The California State Floral Society will give a complimentary dahlia show on the second Friday in September instead of the regular monthly meeting which would take place on that date. The show will be held in Elks' hall and an elegant display is expected. John Hinkle and John Vallance are on the committee of arrangements.

The young stock in the houses of the Holland Nursery Co., of Elmhurst, looks very well at this time and bespeaks for an abundant crop of flowers in the near future. G.

ROSES FOR HEDGES.

A hedge of roses is one of the most attractive ornaments to a garden, whether it be kept trimmed low or allowed to extend to six or eight feet high. There are, however, not over half a dozen roses that are used in this latitude for that purpose. Several varieties that are in demand and do well in our eastern states are not suitable for this climate. An ideal hedge rose is one that makes a small, clean growth, has bright glossy foliage, a good bloom for cutting and will stand pruning several times a year. Many of our choicest blooms come from the most straggly growing varieties and again some of the most suitable sorts, when foliage and habits are considered, do not produce flowers in sufficient quantity to make them desirable hedge roses. Roses when planted for this purpose should be about three feet apart. It is possible to handle them even closer and at a greater distance, but I have found that three feet is all right.

In red roses Agrippina is by far the best to plant. With us it blooms every day in the year, and the masses of color borne throughout the spring, summer and fall make a well kept hedge an object of interest even in California. I have planted for an experiment Gruss an Teplitz for the same purpose and it appears to be a close second to Agrippina, but has not proven quite such an abundant bloomer.

In white where a low hedge is wanted Double Cherokee easily fills the bill. It has pleasing glossy foliage, stands trimming well, and is a good bloomer. If a higher hedge is wanted Gloire Lyonnaise easily outranks all our other white kinds. It is a free bloomer and bears its flowers on long stems. It cannot be kept as a low grown hedge.

When a pink effect is desired Duchess de Brabant easily heads the list. It has all the good qualities for a hedge rose and its blooms are much esteemed for cutting.

In yellow varieties the old-fashioned Safrano can not be beat and in addition Marie Van Houtte, although it does not stand trimming as well as some of the other sorts, makes a fairly good hedge. Bon Silene can be trained fairly well and is a good bloomer. All the polyantha roses make good hedge roses, and although not as showy as the other varieties I have mentioned, they are fairly satisfactory. G.

PLANTING CEMETERY PLOTS.

There have been great changes in the system of planting cemetery plots in the past twenty-five years. It was formerly the proper thing to plant Monterey cypress, willow, white birch, weeping elm, or something in this style of growth in a plot no matter how small. A glance over our cemeteries will reveal in the older portion a mass of dense shade in a majority of the plots consisting of large, heavy growths that are neither ornamental nor useful. Many of our burial grounds were originally started in barren places and the desire to have something green and fresh looking often started the selection of trees and shrubs, wholly unsuitable for anything except extra large sections. An unkempt cemetery plot is one of the most miserable looking objects the gardener has to deal with and the accumulation of foliage in contracted situations has done much toward the revolutionizing of the planting in places of burial.

To begin with, the grass lawn has found much favor with the general public, and most of our attractive cemetery plots are planted with either Australian rye or Kentucky blue. The latter makes by far the best sod, and unless it is to be planted in a place where there will be an abundance of water it should always be used. It requires cutting from every ten to fourteen days during our warm season and not over half that quantity of times during our coldest months. Iceland moss has found favor with many gardeners, and where there is an abundance of water and plenty of time to dig and replant each season it makes a beautiful green mat.

Standard or tree roses have taken the place of almost everything else in the line of ornamental shrubbery. They do not litter the grass as do the bush roses, do not take up as much room, are easier kept in shape and make a much better general appearance in either a large or small place.

Where something in the line of shrubbery is wanted I should recommend first, Golden arbor-vitae, then Diosma and Irish yew. These plants act well in a place of this nature and they are well liked by the public. As for the same reason they are easier kept within bounds or look pretty whether small or large.

We are asked occasionally for something to plant in urns or large vases. As the chances for almost anything to receive sufficient moisture are always poor in such a place I usually recommend Yucca aloifolia variegata or Aloe americana variegata. Both of these are of slow growth and if watered once a month in this climate will succeed very well. For large vases where there is no danger of the contents drying out I have planted Chamaerops excelsa with pink and white ivy geraniums around the edge. The palm will usually last four or five years before it has to be changed, and in the meanwhile makes a very attractive object. For borders around walks or coping dwarf boxwood I consider the most serviceable, and when a low dividing hedge is wanted Diosma, tree box, Pittosporum eugenioides or Pittosporum tenuifolium give satisfaction. They are easily kept at any desired height, do not need but little moisture and are covered with glossy foliage all the time.

When the plot is of large size and something effective is called for araucarias, Chamaerops excelsa, Phoenix canariensis and Washingtonia robusta seem to fill the popular idea of what looks in good taste in a cemetery. These should never be planted unless there is certain to be abundant room for them to spread in, for there is nothing that is more distasteful to the landscape gardener than disfigured palms.

Ivy, ampelopsis or muehlenbeckia are no longer planted here to any extent. The effect wanted in the majority of cases is that considered desirable in the planting of any city plot where the space is very limited and something bright and lasting has taken the place of the old-fashioned dark, heavy coniferous or deciduous growths. G.

DENVER.

The Market.

Trade was fairly good the past week considering the warm weather and will likely be ahead of former years for the same period. One or two large funerals helped out considerably, one being that of C. H. Young, local superintendent of the Wells-Fargo Express Co. Some very large and beautiful designs and bunches were seen there.

There is an increasing supply of roses, especially Brides, but the demand is not so great. Maids are not so plentiful and are still of small flower. Chatenay, being of finer color and longer stem, sells better.

American Beauties are the best stock in the market and sell well. While not over-plentiful there is about enough to meet the demand. They retail from $3 to $5 per dozen.

Carnations are about out of the market and it is almost impossible to obtain stock to fill orders. The only good ones coming in appear to be white ones.

Hannah Hobart

Asters are becoming plentiful and range in price from 50 cents to $1 per hundred. Gladioli are being received in larger numbers and prices are about the usual summer standard. Sweet peas are not so plentiful and are of short stem and some dealers retail them as low as 5 cents per bunch of twenty-five. There are quite a number of outdoor flowers now coming in such as Golden Glow, phlox, physostegia, etc., which come in handy for decorative purposes.

Various Notes.

Miss Scott, of Buffalo, is visiting her brother, Philip Scott, of the Scott Floral Co.

The Fraternal Order of Eagles held their national convention here the past week and while they spent quite a lot of money, very little of it went for flowers, but it will get into circulation soon and help the craft indirectly. One feature of their parade was seven wagon-loads of snow from the line of the Moffat railroad, only sixty miles from Denver, showing the difference in climate, it being very hot in Denver that day.

R. S. Mahan, of the Alpha Floral Co., had his brother from Salt Lake visiting him during the Eagle's convention.

A. H. Bush, of Daniels & Fisher, was in attendance at the S. A. F.

We noticed that J. A. Valentine, of the Park Floral Co., came in seventh highest place in the individual bowling contest, winning a carving-set, and Frank Crump, of Colorado Springs, fourth place, winning a loving cup.

J. A. Sked, foreman of the Park Floral Co.'s greenhouses, is enjoying a two weeks' vacation in the mountains.

EACH week I anxiously look for the coming of the REVIEW. It has helped me in many ways and I hardly know how I could get along without it.—F. G. LEE, Cazenovia, N. Y.

CONNECTION OF EXPANSION TANK.

Will you kindly tell me through the REVIEW whether the expansion tank of a hot water system should be connected to the flow or return and which would produce the best circulation where the tank is necessarily but about a foot and a half above the highest point in the system? F. E. C.

Wherever possible connect the expansion tank with the return rather than the riser and place it as far above the highest point in the system as possible. L. C. C.

PIPING.

Will you kindly tell me the best way of piping a small conservatory 16x21 feet? The peak is nine feet and the eaves a little over five. How many feet of radiation will be required to keep a temperature of 60 degrees when the thermometer sometimes reaches 40 degrees below in Minnesota? S.

It appears to me that the simplest manner of heating the little building under consideration, with hot water, is to carry a 2 or 2½-inch flow pipe from the boiler into one corner of the greenhouse near the entrance door, from there carry a coil consisting of six 2-inch pipes around the walls of the house to the opposite side of the door and from a manifold at this point carry a 2-inch return below the door back to the point where the flow enters the house and from there back to the boiler. POSITION OF EXPANSION TANK.

Will you kindly tell us of a way of connecting 4-inch hot water pipes, making them perfectly tight, without the use of lead? Also please state whether it is absolutely necessary to place the expansion tank right above at the highest point of the pipes or whether it is just as well to place it above the place where one of the return pipes enters the boiler, a Hitchings No. 16, providing we place it say seven or eight feet above the highest point of the pipes and connect it with said return pipe. F. & F.

There are several cements suitable for metallic joints which contain no lead. A cement made of the following proportions is sometimes used: Sal ammoniac, 2 oz.; sulphur, 1 oz.; clean iron borings or filings reduced to powder, 12 lbs., with water enough added to make a paste.

The expansion tank is best located so as to make direct connection with the main return near the boiler and several feet higher than the highest point in the system. L. C. C.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I have a boiler thirty-six inches in diameter and five feet long, with sixty-five 2-inch flues. I am using this to heat two houses, one 17x50 feet and the other 17x72 feet. How many more square feet of glass will it heat? W. E. T.

It is probable that your present boiler will safely carry about 800 to 1,000 square feet of glass in addition to what you already have. L. C. C.

Araucaria Excelsa

OUR SPECIALITY.

Fill your empty houses now and make 100 per cent on your money while you sleep. Note.—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the

from Belgium.

These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

	Each
5¼-in. pots, 10 to 12 in. high, 2 yrs. old, 3 tiers	$0.50
5½-in. pots, 13 to 15 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers	.60
6-in. pots, 16 to 18 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers	.75

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

There is very little to report from here this week, several of our leading florists being out of town attending the convention. This city was visited by a severe storm of wind and rain, damaging the growing crops, but inflicting little damage to stuff not yet housed. Nearly all the growers have benched their carnations, a few still holding off. Roses are beginning to come in in better condition and prices are stiffening up a little. Carnations are still of poor quality and are not in very great demand. Asters, gladioli, rudbeckia and other summer blooms are selling fairly well, but only fair prices are being realized.

Various Notes.

Several of the florists here suffered quite a loss to their glass by a hail storm which passed over here last Thursday.

While visiting among the growers last week we found some new places which have been overlooked in the past. Among those visited was the plant of Chas. Laundy, of 4800 Broadway. Mr. Laundy is off quite a piece from the car line, but his place reflects credit upon his efforts. Although a young man, starting with but little capital six years ago, he has now 6,000 feet of glass devoted to bedding plants exclusively. His local trade is sufficient to clean up his entire stock.

Another place visited was that of A. Blankenfeld, at Thirty-eighth and Main. His place consists of about 6,000 feet, in which are grown about 3,000 carnations, principally Joost, for which he has an excellent market. Mr. Blankenfeld has a bench of excellent mums which are the best I have seen. His trade has reached quite satisfactory proportions.

An invitation has been extended by one of our prominent florists to attend an outing to be given by him about the middle of next month at his country home to all the florists in the city and vicinity. A large crowd is expected and as the host is known never to do anything by halves, a splendid time is assured.

"The finest we have ever seen for this time of the year," was the verdict of a number of out-of-town florists, who under the chaperonage of your correspondent looked into the house of Gloire de Lorraine belonging to Samuel Murray, at Thirty-third and Prospect. That he will create a sensation at the flower show goes without saying.

Speaking of the flower show, that it will be one of the finest is assured, backed as it is by the best business men in the city, who will spare no expense to make it a howling success. Their motto has always been, "Hang the expense, only make this town a good place in which to live." NARCISSUS.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the past week has been considerably better than during the first two weeks of the month; this may be accounted for by the cooler weather and the amount of funeral work the retail florists have had during the week. Asters and gladiolus are coming in in great quantities, and we were informed that asters were wholesaled as low as $1.80 per 1,000. We do know that they were retailed at 5 cents per dozen. Good asters are bringing from $1 to $1.50 per 100 wholesale. Roses and carnations are scarce. A few fairly good carnations are being sent in off of young stock, but in very limited quantities.

Various Notes.

Mr. Chas. Tidy, of S. Tidy & Son, and Mr. H. G. Dilmuth are back to duty again after their vacation.

The new Yonge street store "The Rosary" is nearing completion and is expected to be opened before the end of the month. It certainly looks at this stage as though no limit was being put on the amount expended in fitting it up.

At the present moment it looks as though the Canadian Florist was to be started again; this time by the Horticulturist Publishing Co. This will at least insure it a good financial backing, and it will now be up to the Canadian trade to support it.

The boys who took in the Montreal convention are still talking about the time they had at Montreal. The Montreal Florists' Club certainly used the visiting delegates the best they knew how, and the Toronto boys consider they know how, even to the Montreal grand bounce which they were treated to when entraining for home. BEAVER, PA.—W. S. Kidd has just erected three houses, 20x100, and will grow roses, carnations and general stock.

GAS OR COAL FOR FUEL.

As our town is about to be supplied with natural gas, we wish to ask you some questions before we decide between gas and coal for heating our greenhouses the coming winter. For heating purposes, what is the comparative value of natural gas at 15 cents per 1,000 cubic feet and Massillon slack at $1.50 per ton? Are two 2-inch pipes sufficient to convey gas to a 25-horse-power boiler, locomotive type? What is the best burner for the consuming of natural gas in such a boiler, the fire-box of which is fifty-one inches long, twenty-seven inches high and twenty-nine inches wide? How many burners should be put in such a boiler? The tubes of the boiler number thirty-nine and are three inches in diameter. What is the cost of the best burner and where can it be obtained? Could an ordinary plumber place a gas burner in a boiler satisfactorily? Does the burning of natural gas injure a smoke stack built of shale brick and Portland cement? If so, how rapidly? What has been the experience of florists in the use of natural gas for heating their greenhouses?

F. H. D. W. & C.

The best answer I can make to the question regarding the comparative value of gas and slack is to say that 30,000 cubic feet of gas is reckoned as the equivalent of one ton of best anthracite or bituminous coal. Gas at 15 cents per 1,000 would be equal to the best coal at $4.50 per ton. The comparative value of slack and lump coal is not known to me but from what has been stated you can draw your own conclusions.

If you have a good pressure of gas, 20 to 30 lbs. or more, a single 2-inch pipe will be ample to supply fuel for a 25-horse power boiler.

The essential part of a burner for using natural gas is the mixer. With a good mixer of sufficient size a T or L at the end of the pipe for the flame is quite satisfactory. A good burner, however, is one consisting of a mixer of large size which will carry a 2-inch pipe. Use a piece of 2-inch pipe about 15 inches long, cap one end and through the rim of the cap drill five or six ⅜-inch holes. About two inches below the holes in the cap drill five or six holes in the pipe which can be threaded to receive ⅜-inch nipples each 3 or 3½ inches long. Below this ring of holes drill another which miss-match those first drilled, and thread a like set of nipples about 4½ inches long, and in like manner insert a third set of nipples which shall be about an inch longer than the set next above them. A plumber can make this very easily and it is one of the best burners for furnace or boiler use with which I am familiar. Three burners of this type should be sufficient for the boiler in question. I do not know that the burning of gas has a more destructive effect on chimneys than other fuels. Natural gas, when available, is the most convenient fuel that can be used. L. C. C.

LILIUM SULPHUREUM.

One small bulb received three years ago, from a friend in Vermont, made but little growth the first year and did not bloom until the second year, when it produced two large blossoms, on a strong stem. This, the third season after planting, the main stalk has grown to be more than five feet high, bearing eight immense bells, nine inches long, or twelve inches, counting the short stem from the main stalk, by eight and one-half to nine inches across at the reflex of the petals. The flower somewhat resembles longiflorum in form, while in color it more resembles auratum, but is not so strongly marked, the color being creamy white, shading to yellow in the throat. The outside of the petals is tinged with purple but the whole flower is practically white. The perfume is very strong, but delightfully sweet and agreeable. It multiplies from bulblets in the axils of the leaves, like tiger lilies. I am told it is very rare and the bulblets valuable. We used four of the flowers in a large pillow design, which attracted much attention. Edw. Teas.

HEATING SASH HOUSES.

We have three connected sash houses, thirty-two feet high, with high side walls. The houses run north and south. We have been heating the west one from a hot water boiler at the south end, by four 2-inch pipes around the sides, underneath the benches. Can you tell us how to connect the boiler with the other two houses? We would like the same heat in the second house and only half as much in the third; we should also like to be able to shut off all the heat from the third house in the coldest weather. Is there any way we can arrange this, as there is no building in front of the last two houses? MASS.

By sacrificing a little heat and placing that much extra work upon your boiler you can heat all three of your houses from the one boiler, even if you have no shed over the end. An independent riser can be carried from the boiler to supply these two houses. A 2-inch or 2½-inch pipe will be sufficient. It can be carried from the boiler to the highest point under the ridge of house No. 2; there supply a 2-inch riser to heat house No. 2, which can be piped with a 2-inch flow under the ridge, returning by two 2-inch pipes under each side bench or along side walls. House No. 3 can be heated by carrying the riser on the outside from the ridge of house No. 2 to the ridge of house No. 3 and there supply a 2-inch flow, which can be returned by two 2-inch returns, one under each side bench.

In order that this house may be thrown out of commission during severe weather it will be necessary to place a gate valve on the main flow pipe in house No. 2, so as to cut off the flow to house No. 3. An air valve should be placed on this flow pipe where it makes the angle under the ridge in house No. 3, or just behind the gate valve in house No. 2. The main return, which can be carried through the houses on the surface of the ground back to boiler, should also be provided with a gate valve to cut off the return from house No. 3, but so as not to interfere with the circulation in house No. 2. The main return in house No. 3 must also be provided with a ½-inch or ¾-inch opening into which a hose bib or nipple carrying a valve shall be placed. This outlet should be at the lowest place in the return in house No. 3 and as near as possible to the gate valve. When house No. 3 is to be put out of service close both gate valves, open the air vent in the flow pipe and then open the drain valve in the return, so as to drain all the water out of the pipes in the house to be left cold.

The riser between the ridges of houses No. 2 and No. 3 should be covered with asbestos pipe covering and over this build a box so arranged as to protect the covering from the weather. I have used galvanized gutters of proper size as a housing for exposed pipe covered with asbestos wrapping. L. C. C.

PRESSURE SYSTEM.

Kindly give plan and particulars of pressure system. How many square feet of exposed sash can be heated by one foot of hot water radiation, maintaining a temperature of 45 degrees at night when outside temperature is 15 degrees to 20 degrees below zero? How many more square feet could be heated under same conditions with pressure system, tank raised to an altitude of 8 to 10 feet? Would any precautions be necessary to prevent the water in such a tank freezing?

In a house 20 feet wide, heating pipes on side walls, would it be necessary to have pipes arranged to heat the end of the house exposed to west winds?

WM. K.

I take it for granted that you refer to hot water under pressure. This simply means that the water in the pipes is placed under pressure either by use of an elevated expansion tank or by connecting the system with a general supply having considerable pressure. City water works pressure is sometimes used when the pressure does not exceed 30 or 40 pounds. It is estimated that hot water either under pressure or in open circuit at 160 degrees temperature will carry 4.5 square feet of glass at 45 degrees for each square foot of radiating surface. If the water is heated to 180 degrees each foot of radiation will carry 5.4 square feet of glass at 45 degrees under the conditions you recite, the area heated varying in proportion to the heat of the water. The advantage of the pressure system lies in the use of smaller threaded pipes instead of the cumbersome expensive cast-iron pipes and in the fact that the water in such pipes can be carried at a higher temperature than in those not under pressure. Water in open circuit cannot be heated above 212 degrees F., while water under pressure can be forced beyond this point. The pressure system is an advantage in cold snaps when it is necessary to force the fires. Then, too, this plan admits of a combination plant which can be used for hot water during mild weather, and as a steam plant during severe weather. It is well to have this expansion tank well protected in severe climates as hot water pipes freeze more readily than cold water pipes.

Whether or not pipes should be carried across exposed end of 20-foot house all depends upon the amount of radiation carried in the house and its distribution. Under normal conditions it would be best to turn the manifolds used on the side walls across the exposed end as well.

PIPING.

Will you please let me know the amount of pipe it will take to heat a small greenhouse 10x25 and 7 feet to the ridge? I want 60 degrees in zero weather and want to put flow pipes under the ridge and come back with 1¼-inch returns.

G. W. H.

I judge you wish to use hot water for heating this small house. If so a good plan will be to run a 2-inch riser under the ridge and return it through twelve 1¼-inch pipes arranged on the side walls or under the benches. If steam is to be used a 1½-inch riser returning by nine 1¼-inch pipes will be sufficient. L. C. C.

HEATING PROBLEM.

Will you give the best plan for heating the three greenhouses, the plans of which we enclose? We have figured on using steam, as we have always used it and are not acquainted with the use of hot water only through the trade papers.

Nos. 1 and 2 are to be used for carnations principally and to be kept between 50 and 55 degrees at night. No. 3 is for roses, etc., and is to be kept at 50 or 60 degrees at night. We will build where there is solid stone within two feet of surface and would like to know if return steam can be raised to boiler pit or ground surface in a satisfactory way. The houses are all to be 100 feet long and contain about 6,200 square feet of glass all told. Is there a better way to build the houses than north and south, with work shed across the north end? What horse-power boiler will be required to furnish steam and would it be advisable to use horizontal tubular boilers?

J. H. C.

The two connected houses, which are to be used for carnations, can be piped as follows: House No. 1, the outside house, should have a 2-inch flow under ridge, returning to the main return through eight 1¼-inch pipes. House No. 2, the center house, should have a 2-inch riser under ridge and seven 1¼-inch return pipes under the benches. House No. 3, the rose house, will require a 2½-inch riser under the ridge returning by fourteen 1¼-inch pipes distributed so as to give one extra pipe along the outside wall or under the bench nearest the outside wall. Your plant requires between fourteen and fifteen hundred feet of radiation, which to heat will require a boiler with at least 200 feet of heating surface. A 15-horse-power return flue boiler will probably be adequate. If the rock is not too hard it will certainly be economy to make an excavation sufficiently deep to place the water line in the boiler 2 or 3 feet below the level of the return pipes under the benches of the greenhouses. Use a low ash-pit and fire-box and get the boiler setting as low down as possible to economize in excavation. The cost of the excavation will probably not be more than the cost of a steam-trap or feed pump and hot well which will be necessary if the boiler is kept above ground. A gasoline engine, a steam-trap or a steam pump, can any of them be used to return the water to the boiler when it is set above ground, but all are expensive to install and require constant attention and are to be avoided if possible in small plants. A gravity system with sufficient fall always gives satisfaction. L. C. C.

HEATING.

I intend to use a hot water heater for my greenhouses and will have to have a supply tank for the heater. I have a large supply tank above my heater which I use to water my plants with. Would it keep the water too warm in this tank to water with if I used this tank to supply my heater? Or would I have to have an extra tank to supply my heater?

W. S. L.

If, as you say, the supply tank for watering purposes is of large capacity—30 to 100 barrels—I do not think the expansion pipe if connected directly from the main return to the boiler with this tank would heat the water sufficiently to be a disadvantage for watering purposes. In fact, tepid water is somewhat of an advantage. If the water never gets above 80 or 90 degrees F. there will not be the slightest danger from using it for watering purposes. L. C. C.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Starting French Bulbs.

The arrival of the Roman hyacinth and Paper White narcissus bulbs reminds us that summer is drawing to a close; as we get older it seems to take less time for the seasons to revolve.

We are glad of the flowers of these bulbs, so box some of each at once. Use boxes of a uniform size because it is economy of space. We find 12x24 inches, and three inches deep, a convenient size and they are not back-breaking to carry in and out of the houses. You can put the bulbs quite close. Sixty Roman hyacinths or fifty Paper Whites will go in a flat of the size mentioned. Let the top of each bulb be even with the surface of the soil or top of the box. The soil should be moderately firm beneath and around the bulbs. There is no better place for the flats than outdoors. We like to lay down some old boards for the ends of the flats to rest on, because they lift clean when bringing them in to force.

Root Action Necessary.

Before covering the flats with three inches of earth, or tan bark, or whatever material you use, give the flats a most thorough watering. Now, we shall get lots of warm, dry weather before these bulbs are brought into the greenhouse, and the object of putting them in flats so early and covering them with earth is to get a good root growth without starting the bulb. They must not be neglected for water. When you plant a tulip or hyacinth in the ground in October or November, it not only receives moisture from the rains, but moisture is continually rising from the subsoil to the surface, which is sufficient to nourish the roots. The bulbs in the flats, with board bottoms, get none of this and are dependent entirely on rains or artificial watering and it takes a heavy rain to penetrate four or five inches into the ground. Besides this first good watering, unless we have frequent rains, the beds containing the flats of bulbs should have a good soaking once a week.

I have dwelt at some length on this because it applies to all the bulbs that we grow in flats and which must be well rooted before forcing. We have seen hundreds of flats of tulips brought in during the winter with scarcely any roots, and insufficient water was the cause. As September is often a hot, dry month, choose a spot for the flats that is shaded by a wall or building. There will be less drying out.

Propagating Geraniums.

As cool weather approaches propagating will begin. For years we have made the first week in September our time for putting in our first big batch of zonal geraniums. Cuttings taken from a crowded flower bed are liable to be long-jointed and soft. Every florist should have his stock plants that have been given plenty of room. These plants give the best of cuttings. There is no need of a propagating house for these early cuttings. We pot them in good loam at once into 2-inch pots, or, for strong growing varieties, 2½-inch pots. The pots can be stood on any light bench, almost touching. Pot firmly.

Now what does this mean? It does not mean that after you have held the cutting in your left hand and filled the little pot with the soil, that you begin a performance of thumbing the surface of the soil. That only makes the surface firm and leaves the soil loose at the bottom of the pot, where the end of the cutting is. Get two or three fingers down straight in the soil so that the soil is firm around the base of the cutting. The watering will make the rest firm enough. Give the cuttings a thorough watering when first potted. That will do for several days and after that water only when they are quite dry. You could leave this early propagation until the end of the month if you have cuttings enough for all you require, but with most of us we have not and by taking a good batch now the old plants break and give you another lot of cuttings before they are injured by frost.

The variegated and tricolor varieties do better put into flats of sand, and the useful little Mme. Salleroi do not touch. Plants lifted just before frost will give you all the cuttings you need in January.

Transplant the Pansies.

Pansies that were sown in July and that are destined to winter outside, with only a covering of straw or evergreen boughs, should now be transplanted from the seed bed to the winter beds. They are too often sown very thickly and quickly become drawn. Plant four inches apart or, if space is abundant, five inches, and occasionally give them a good soaking in dry weather. There are many fine strains of pansies, but no variety will give you fine flowers without rich soil, so the beds you transplant the seedlings in should be about one-third manure. Dig in a lot of it and you will reap the benefit next spring.

Crimson Ramblers in Pots.

Crimson Rambler and other ramblers grown in pots from dormant plants last spring, if properly cared for, will have made all the growth desirable and should now be stood outdoors to ripen the growth. See that they are on a place where water cannot stand around the pots, for you do not want them to make any more growth, and warm weather and moisture will make the canes break into lateral growth, which is not desirable.

I see the Philadelphia growers depend entirely on plants of this Easter favorite that are planted out during summer and lifted and potted in November. This is correct for experts who have the means of caring for them during that crucial period between lifting and starting into growth, but, although we must admit they are the freshest in foliage and largest in flower, they are, with northern growers, a total failure and the pot-grown plants need never be a failure.

Ripening Hydrangea Growths.

You cannot travel with your eyes open without getting a hint. I noticed that the Philadelphia growers of Hydrangea Otaksa, which had been plunged in frames in 6-inch pots and had made four or five strong shoots, had their plants lifted from the frames and stood out on dry ground, which would arrest their vigorous growth and ripen their wood and buds. This plant will endure strong frost in winter, when it comes gradually, and the wood is ripe, but if kept growing with us until late in the fall and then subjected to three or four degrees of frost, the flower buds are ruined. The Philadelphians do not want any frost to ripen up their hydrangeas, but do it by a gradual withholding of water.

Larvae on Mignonette.

Just about now is the time the larvæ of the yellow butterfly will infest the mignonette. It is so exactly the color of the plants it feeds on that you do not easily discover it. A dusting of hellebore on the plants will make the larvæ sick, or a teaspoonful of Paris green in a pail of water and syringed over the plants will do the trick.

Winter Sweet Peas.

It will soon be time to sow sweet peas for those who want them in December and January. It makes little difference whether they are grown on a raised bench in six inches of soil or on a bed on the ground with a foot of soil. On a raised bench with less depth of soil they may be a few days earlier and in a deeper soil the flowers will be rather finer and the vines last longer. Let there be three feet between the rows, so that there is plenty of daylight, and do not sow or plant too thickly.

If you have no bench or bed vacant just now you can sow three or four seeds in a 3-inch pot and plant in a bed a month later. If you follow the latter plan a small twig of some sort should be given the plants in the pots for the vines to climb on.

Many attempts to produce sweet peas in winter have been a failure, mostly on account of the varieties planted. We know of two varieties that will flower in midwinter, Earliest of All, blush white and rose, and the fine white, Mont Blanc. Won't some specialist tell us of a blue or lavender and a red that are also good for forcing? Soil that is moderately rich is better than much manure. For a fertilizer use bone meal.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

TROUBLE WITH BOSTONS.

I send some fronds of Boston fern and would like to know what is the trouble with them. You will see the white streaks under the leaves. They have the appearance of eggs of some kind but start at the pot and gradually spread over the whole plant. I have a heavy stock of ferns which are growing very fast and look perfectly healthy except for this trouble. What shall I do for it? G. E.

The fern fronds in question were rather badly decayed when received, but there was still abundant evidence as to the cause of the trouble. It is a severe attack of a certain scale insect, a chionaspis, I think, and one that does much injury to any fern upon which it spreads. The full-grown insect is a small, dull-brown scale, some of which were found upon the specimens sent, and the tiny white objects are the young insects.

If the plants are as badly infested as the specimens would indicate, some rather heroic treatment will be required, and I would suggest cutting off the worst leaves and burning them, and then giving the plants a dipping in solution of tobacco extract, using one part of Rose Leaf Extract of Tobacco to forty parts of water.

It is quite possible that this solution may injure the young tips of the fern leaves somewhat, but without such treatment it is most likely that the ferns will be spoiled by the insects, so it becomes a matter of choosing the lesser evil. But if the ferns are laid over on their sides on the bench after dipping, and are protected from the light by covering with newspapers for twenty-four hours, it is probable that the foliage will not suffer badly.

BLUE AND WHITE.

White snapdragons, Asparagus plumosus and blue and white Canterbury bells fill the white willow basket shown in the accompanying illustration. It has a flat bottom and square handle. Owing to the unusual height of the handle, there is space for the display of the tall stalks of the Canterbury bells, the grouping of which shows two prominent points, one at a greater height on the right and the other more than half way up on the left. A shorter cluster of white snapdragons with a heavy fringe of the asparagus fills the lower left and front of the basket. Toward the right the asparagus border lightens and lengthens, ending in several delicate strands far out from the base of the handle. The flat top of the handle is also draped with a heavy strand of asparagus, which falls back from the handle on the left and forward from the right corner.

Slightly to the left of the top of the handle, at the point where the asparagus is attached to it, the most prominent of the upper group of doves is perched, the heavy wire with which it was attached to its original mounting serving to fasten it on the handle of the basket. The two other doves of this group are set on close to the corner, and the two remaining ones are mounted as shown, one on the inside edge of the left handle and the last nestling among the flowers on the lower edge of the basket.

While in this case blue and white was the pleasing color combination, lavender and white or pink and white could be properly employed with the doves. Chatenay or Ideal roses are good color material for this scheme. Whatever the color employed, there should be less white than color used in order to strengthen the contrast made by the sharp white of the doves.

Gladioli, asters, hollyhocks or phlox would all make good material for a basket study like this. The design may be used for a display or funeral basket.

THOMAS F. GALVIN.

One of the oldest and most successful of the business houses in the city of Boston is the retail floral establishment of Thomas F. Galvin, located at the prominent and busy corner of Tremont street and Hamilton place, directly opposite the Park street church and the Park street station on the electric subway, and also the more recently erected and handsome branch establishment for Back Bay customers at the corner of Boylston and Fairfield streets.

The Galvin floral history extends over a period of more than a half century, being started by John Galvin, father of the present well known proprietor, whose name in Boston and over a large part of New England stands for everything that is good in the retail flower business. The well known Public Gardens were laid out by John Galvin, who was for many years city forester of Boston.

John Galvin in the early days cultivated the growing taste for flowers and supplied the way for gratification by establishing order boxes at Harris & Chapman's, well known druggists at the corner of Tremont and Winter streets; at Curtis & Cobb's store, on Washington street, and at Gibbon's, the leading grocery house of those days. A constant increase in business led him to open the well known flower mart in the Albion building, now occupied by Houghton & Dutton. Here for many years Boston and many of the eastern states sent for choice flowers and the firm secured a national reputation. The business now so successfully managed by Thomas F. Galvin can boast of two of the handsomest flower stores in America.

Peter Fisher's epoch marking Lawson carnation was introduced and named by Mr. Galvin. No floral novelty ever caused such a furor among horticulturists and the wide newspaper publicity given placed this carnation on the highest pedestal and did much toward increasing the popularity of the divine flower.

A large proportion of the big and important social functions which have occurred in Boston during the last quarter of a century have been supplied with floral decorations from T. F. Galvin's, including such affairs as the entertainment by the city of Boston of Queen Kapiolam and Prince Henry of Prussia, and the recent magnificent banquet of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Co. to their London visitors. During the particular seasons when flowers seem to crowd out other things and take the lead in popularity, such as Christmas, Easter, Memorial day, Valentine's day, etc., a visit to the Galvin stores will convince anyone of the great business done.

The artistic and beautiful Back Bay conservatory is the Mecca for society people who want the very best the floral market can supply. This conservatory is conceded to be the ne plus ultra of floral palaces in this country. It is always attractive, but on festal occasions especially so.

Mr. Galvin, during his recent European trip, visited all the leading flower markets and prominent growers for the purpose of making selections of the best things in sight for the coming season.

SWEET PEAS.

As the time for planting sweet peas for Christmas blooming is near, I would ask what are the best varieties in red, white, pink and purple? Should they be planted in solid or raised benches? What soil is best? What treatment should they receive during blooming periods? H. C. H.

Yes, it will soon be time to sow the sweet peas for Christmas, either in the bed where they are to flower, or in 3-inch pots to be later transferred to the bed. The writer once had some sorry experience in planting them in a solid bed. They grew all of twelve feet if straightened out and were very late, but I was assured only last week by the best grower in New England that he grows them in a solid bed about one foot deep. It was the variety and not the bed that caused the failure. Many beautiful peas are useless for forcing. Here are four good varieties: Earliest of All, Blanche Ferry type, splendid for forcing, just what its name implies; Mont Blanc, finest waite for forcing; Countess of Radnor, lavender; Coccinea, scarlet.

Keep at a night temperature of 45 to 50 degrees. Do not crowd the plants and keep moderately moist. Ventilate whenever the weather will permit.

METHODS TO GAIN SUCCESS.

[An essay by F. L. Girdwood, Montreal, read before the Canadian Horticultural Association, August 9, 1905.]

Close attention and specializing in the culture of violets is the only key to success; neglect, carelessness or forgetfulness are absolutely fatal. It is one of those crops which, when scientifically grown, should yield a fair margin of profit, especially if the grower has reasonable facilities for transportation and is not too far away from his market.

The uncertainty of a violet crop, the innumerable obstacles encountered, the unforeseen difficulties to be contended with, the prejudices to overcome, give a decided zest to the work and a pleasure to the grower, especially when he reaches the goal he wished to attain and his efforts have been crowned with success.

It is my intention to make a very short summary of the selection, ways, means and methods of cultivating violets commercially and incidentally touching upon transplanting, fertilization, care of the house, its heating, lighting, ventilation and drainage. Then planting, syringing and propagation and finally diseases, pests, picking, packing and marketing.

No matter how good your stock is, there is always room for improvement. The best growers never sell the choicest of their stock, so the grower commencing in a small way is rather handicapped, having to put up with possibly second rate plants. The first season a grower has his house filled with plants is the time to make careful selection for next year's stock, and I may say that it is imperative to keep the best. By continuing to do this for several years, the flower bearing possibilities of your plants will very materially increase, not only in number but very probably in size of flowers.

Propagation.

There are four ways of propagation:

(1) By cuttings three or four inches long, made from carefully selected, well-formed and well-developed runners and rooted in clean, sharp sand.

(2) By divisions made by taking up the old plants and separating them, the old roots, woody, fibrous stems and dead leaves being discarded and burned. The young, well-rooted divisions should be transplanted and placed two or three inches apart each way. They must be well watered and placed in the shade for several days, until such time as they are well established, and in about three weeks they can be carefully lifted with a trowel, leaving a good earth ball attached to each plant.

(3) By cuttings made from young, unrooted crowns, or divisions of the old plant, removed during the winter or spring without disturbing the mother plant.

(4) By removing well-rooted young divisions, crowns or offshoots, without injuring or disturbing the flowering plant, then carefully nursing them the same as the divisions in spring.

Strong, hardy plants should always be chosen, with an abundance of good foliage and well defined roots.

Field Planting.

Plants set out in May to sun-ripen where the soil is perfectly drained, get splendidly established, are stronger, healthier and more vigorous than those set out later in the season, when the weather is invariably hot and dry and the soil parched and cracked. They should not be planted so deep as to retard their growth or injure the life of the plant, and they must be kept free from weeds, runners and decayed leaves, and the flowers should always be picked at this time, whether marketable or not.

The soil during the violets' stay in the field should be frequently stirred and great caution must be used to eliminate the possibility of injury to the roots.

Three or four months in the field will make them strong enough to transplant about September to the greenhouse and it will be found advantageous to take as much earth with the roots as possible.

Soils.

Benches should be so constructed as to be able to take in five rows nine inches apart and should contain at least six inches of loam. At the bottom of the bench should be ½-inch openings, carefully covered with loose broken stone and ashes. This is to ensure perfect drainage, as violets will not thrive where the earth becomes sour or sodden.

The compost should be made in the autumn for next winter's benches. Good, strong, fibrous loam and barnyard manure is best, properly mixed in the proportion of one part of manure to two of loam. This should be left standing until the spring, when it should be chopped down and thrown into a heap to facilitate the continuance of decomposition. This earth should measure up to the cubic capacity of your benches to insure having a sufficient quantity.

Where practicable this soil might be sterilized, and if scientifically treated should make it in ideal condition for your beds and for the time being eliminate such pests as red spider, aphis and fungus.

A number of authorities upon sterilizing quote 212 degrees as being the correct temperature. This is erroneous. It should be 176 degrees, because 212 degrees would free the ammonia, one of the most important factors, and besides the salts would lose their fertilizing power. I have the highest authority for this statement.

Equipment.

The plants should be properly bedded to avoid being drowned during syringing. Syringing should only be done on bright days during the winter, as the plants must not be wet late in the day.

In my experience with many furnaces, the Robert W. King takes the palm. It is easily attended to, low pressure, reasonable in cost, nothing to get out of order and should last for years with care. The piping should run the whole length of the building, underneath the benches. My great objection to placing them near the glass is that you are losing heat through radiation outside (coal costs money) and then besides you are encouraging the prolific incubation of the very pests that you wish to exterminate.

Your house should have King's automatic thermostat for proper regulation of temperature, and if correctly set will close the ventilators securely before any damage can be done to the plants. A bell attachment to this will notify you of the change in the temperature and will aid you in the attendance needed at the furnaces.

The violets' susceptibility to frost necessitates the house to be 50 degrees in the day and 38 degrees at night. They should also be protected from the direct rays of the sun by having the glass frosted the proper way.

Tremont Street Store of Thos. F. Galvin, Boston.

Pests.

Great care of the plants is required in the greenhouse in keeping them free of red spider and aphis. The red spider can be kept down by syringing the plants three times a week, bearing in mind at the same time that the more advanced your plants are the more careful must your syringing be.

Fumigation to rid the house of pests is resorted to by many. I do not advocate it, as it is dangerous and poisonous, being a combination of cyanide of potassium and sulphuric acid, termed hydrocyanic-acid gas. In using this gas the cubical contents of your house must be accurately figured out, or all your pains and propagating will go for naught.

Picking and Marketing.

It may be mentioned here that the early violets are nothing like as large as the ones gathered later in the season. When the violets are ready to ship in commercial quantities they should be gathered carefully. No plant should be wounded in any way during the process. The best method is to straighten out the stem to its full length between the thumb and index finger; then follow the stem down to the plant with the third or fourth finger; then break the stem off.

The flowers should be bunched the night before marketing, and let me say here that great caution, good taste, sound judgment in selection, artistically arranged bunches, and neatness in packing is the only way to succeed in gaining or retaining your own reputation and a fair share in the profits.

After bunching the stems should be put in water, allowing the leaves individual to each particular variety to rest upon the edge of a trough in the shape of a "V" with holes large enough for the stems to go through. This will keep them in shape and prevent the flowers from being drowned and losing their fragrance.

One must make a judicious study of the local markets and pander to the prevailing taste of the public to command the best prices. Care should be taken to pack securely from Jack Frost and in such a way as to retain their delightful fragrance during shipment. It will be seen that marketing is a high art and an essential factor to success. The grower must be thoroughly familiar with the needs, peculiarities and eccentricities of his market to be able to cope successfully with its demands.

The crop can be disposed of in several ways, retail, wholesale, through an agent or by commission. These all have advantages and the grower must be guided by his own sound judgment. Any experiments on these lines must be well thought out in a rational, judicious and practical manner.

Nearly every department store of any importance has a flower stand, and if the grower gets in touch with their purchasing agents and has a special flower with a distinct and popular name, one that will fill all requirements, it will be a good advertisement for your violets, as thousands of people must see them during their season every day. This would be a good start and a splendid business could be built up and increased as demand necessitated or opportunity offered.

Don'ts.

Don't let friends smoking a pipe or cigar walk through your houses when you have a large crop. Violets are supersensitive to outside influences.

Don't let your house get too cold or yet too hot.

Don't attempt too many things; better make a success of one.

Don't sell the best you have all the time; they may become a drug in the market and, besides, you need some for yourself.

Don't let weeds accumulate; burn them.

Don't let red spiders get the best of you; soak them.

Don't let everybody plant plants; let somebody plant plants, and the somebody who plants plants must be yourself.

LILIES AND TUBEROSES.

Will you kindly let me know when to plant the St. Joseph's lily for late forcing and how to take care of it, also the auratum lily, and how you grow tuberoses for winter forcing and for summer? L. A. G.

I am not sure what is meant by St. Joseph's lily but have heard Lilium candidum called by that name. Lilium candidum bulbs are received in September and October and can be put into 6-inch pots as soon as received and placed in a frame outdoors. They are nearly hardy in western New York, but should not be exposed to very hard frost when in pots. Bring them in by December 1 and if you do not want them for Easter, put them in a cool house. In a night temperature of 40 degrees during mid-winter, with the natural increase of heat during March and April, they would flower in May, but when we grew this lily we had no difficulty in getting it in flower in early April. Since the introduction of Lilium Harrisii and later the Japanese longiflorum very few L. candidum are forced.

Tuberose flowers are very difficult to produce from New Year's on to April. For late fall the bulbs are held in some cool, dry place and started in September and will flower in December. For March and April flowers the new crop bulbs can be started in early January. Put them three inches apart in flats three inches deep and place over the hot-water pipes. The compost to start them in can be sand and chopped sphagnum. When well started and rooted pot into 4½-inch or 5-inch pots and keep them in a temperature of not less than 70 degrees.

For May and on during summer they can be started in February and March. It is well to start them in flats, in some light material, as you save bench room. If you wish a constant supply then start a batch every two weeks and for the later crops, instead of putting them in pots, you can plant from the flats onto a bench, six inches apart in four inches of light, rich soil. Animal manure is said to induce strong leaf growth at the expense of flowers, but when the spike is well developed liquid manure will greatly improve the quality of the flowers. W. S.

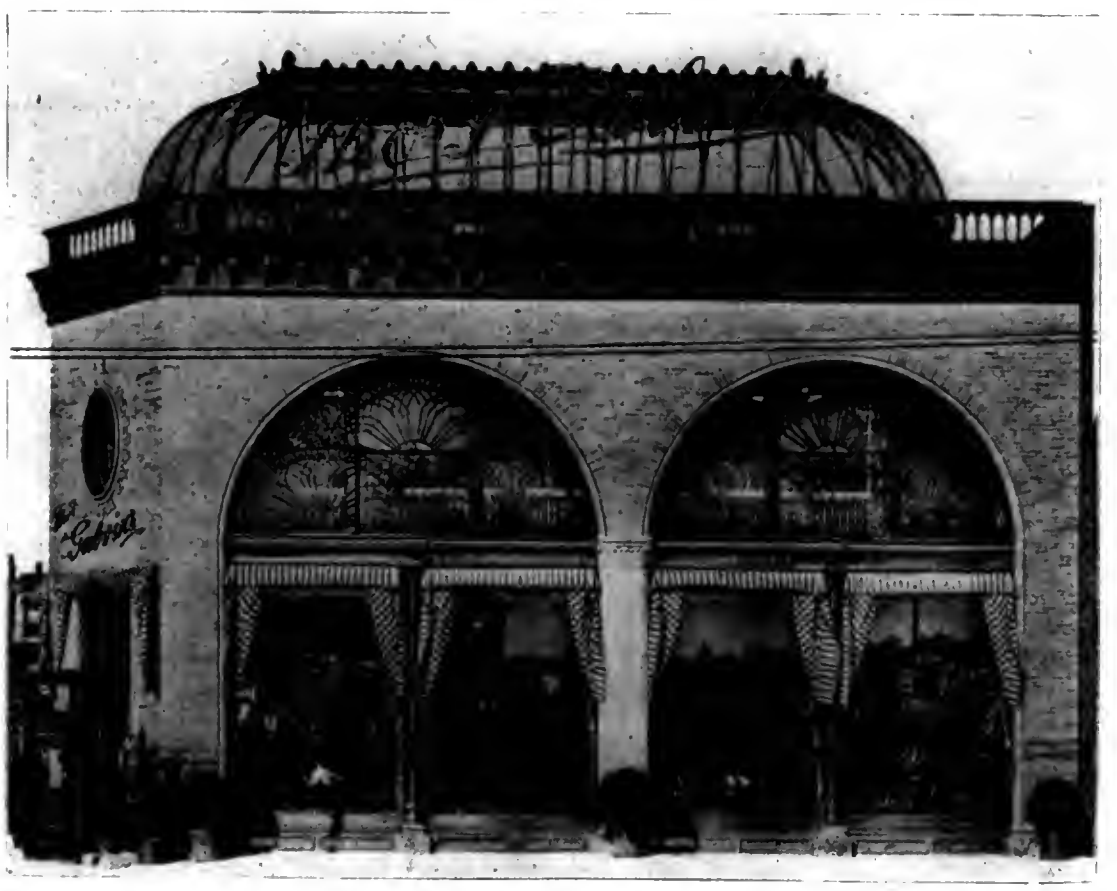
ASPARAGUS COMORENSIS.

I have been growing Asparagus plumosus nanus seed for several years and found among my seedling plants one very beautiful plant which I kept and grew with success. Last year it bore very large seeds of a bluish white color. I planted them and they came up at once and look exactly like their parent plant. I send two of the little plants and two small fronds of the parent. Can you tell me anything about them, or are they something new?

S. B. Ritter.



Owing to the warm weather and some delay in transit the specimens of this asparagus were not in very good condition on their arrival, but it seems probable that the variety in question is Asparagus comorensis. This is not a new variety, having been in cultivation around New York for at least fifteen years, and is considered superior to the ordinary A. plumosus by some growers. A. comorensis is usually darker in foliage than A. plumosus or plumosus nanus, and the foliage is said to be somewhat softer to the touch, but it is merely a variation from A. plumosus, of which there are several seedling variations in cultivation.

RATES FOR WATER.

Is it customary to pay for city water by meter or contract where a person is to use city water for greenhouse work. I have two houses, each 20x143 feet, and will heat by hot water. In my case would you advise using the water by meter or contract? F. W. S.

In some cities water is metered, in others sold at a fixed yearly rental, while in this case it appears, from the wording of the question, that both methods are in vogue and the city officials are so magnanimous as to give the consumer his choice. The preference will naturally depend on the rates charged, which are not stated.

ORNITHOGALUM ARABICUM.

We have just received from California 500 bulbs of Ornithogalum Arabicum and would like to know how to handle them so as to have them come in for Easter as pot plants. We thought of putting five bulbs in a 6-inch pot. Will that be too many? If we plant them now will they bloom for Christmas? We also have some freesia bulbs and would like to know how to keep them so as to plant them for Easter.

A. R.

It is many years since we have seen these bulbs grown and then they were not forced. We think three bulbs in a 6-inch pot would be enough. April and May is the time this species flowers in temperate climates, so they should under glass be easily forced for Easter. I would advise potting at once and, after one watering, keep them rather dry until leaf growth begins. I scarcely think they can be flowered at Christmas.

Freesias are not properly bulbs. They are corms and will keep a long while in a dormant state if kept dry and cool. If you want to make sure of their keeping, then put the corms in perfectly dry sand and place in cool room. W. S.

SNAPDRAGONS.

I would like to say for the benefit of those who have no house for roses and would like to grow something besides carnations for cut flowers, that if they would try antirrhinums they would find something both fine and profitable. Buy the Queen of the North seed, sow it now, transplant into the bed, water, tie up and mulch the same as carnations and the result will be highly pleasing, as they are fine, both for design work and cut flowers. We have tried them for two years and will continue to grow them, for there are always new flower shoots coming on and the blooms will last for two weeks after they are cut.

W. G. Thomas.

The meeting was called to order at 10:30 p. m., President Peter Fisher in the chair. Members present were President Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.; E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. S. Wilson, Western Springs, Ill.; Wm. Weber, Oakland, Md.; Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., and a number of members of the society.

A copy of the by-laws as framed by Secretary Herr was presented for consideration and, after considerable discussion and some changes, they were ordered printed and mailed to each paid-up member of the society at least thirty days before the regular annual meeting, January 24 and 25, 1906, for final adoption.

There being no additional premiums offered for the premium list, the getting up of this list and a program for the meeting was left to be completed by mail at a later date.

Albert M. Herr, Sec'y.

HELIOTROPES.

What time should cuttings of heliotropes be planted to be in flower in 4-inch pots for Christmas? How should they be treated to produce bushy plants?

H. C. H.

Heliotropes root very poorly from cuttings taken from plants growing in the ground and plants rooted late in the spring may be carried over for Christmas. But a better way is to "strike" cuttings that have been grown inside either in pots or some plant that is planted out and has been cut back in July. The heliotrope is a quick growing, quick rooting plant and if kept shifted soon makes a large plant. It requires stopping to make a bushy plant and if stunted for root room is very liable to be attacked with rust. Cuttings rooted now or before the end of August should make good 4-inch plants by Christmas. W. S.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Removal of Dead Foliage.

It is very unlikely that any grower can show a perfectly clean bill of health as far as foliage is concerned. Lifting from the field and transplanting in the benches, no matter how carefully done, is bound to disturb the balance between roots and top, the result being more or less loss of lower foliage. Much depends on the care bestowed on the plants during the time they are getting established; still under certain weather conditions any variety will suffer somewhat. Then there are those inclined to softness in the foliage that are next to impossible to handle without sacrifice of some lower leaves.

Opinions differ as to the advisability of removing this withered foliage, but like most operations there is a right time and way to obtain the best results. Beginning the work too soon, that is, before the leaves have become sufficiently dry to come away without injury to the branch, is one cause of trouble. Then, again, the average American gets very nervous over such tedious work; the job seems to drag, incompetent help is pressed into service to expedite matters, with the result that the plants are handled roughly, loosened from their hold on the soil and many branches broken.

While it is admitted to be aggravating work it pays to do it well. To allow the objectionable foliage to remain not only gives an unsightly appearance to the plants but seriously interferes with free circulation of air among the lower branches, besides furnishing a medium for the collection of moisture where fungous diseases may develop. Again, during the dark days of winter it will be very difficult to dry the foliage before night. By all means clean up the plants. When the job is done your whole establishment will look brighter.

George S. Osborn.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

A meeting of the board of directors of this society was held at the Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., immediately after the adjournment of the evening session of the S. A. F. Tuesday, August 15. All members of the society were invited to attend, said announcement being made by Secretary Stewart.

A SEASON FOR CARE.

As the season for firing approaches conditions call for careful observance in regard to watering and ventilation. The transition from natural to artificial heat is the most critical period in the life of the rose and any carelessness, neglect or ignorance in the administration of the essentials, temperature, ventilation and water, at this season, will bring dire results later on.

To properly prepare the stock for this change due regard must be taken of the fact that evaporation is on the decline and stock cannot use, with advantage, the copious supplies of water necessary during the summer months and consequently the supply must be carefully gauged to meet the diminishing wants. Root action will also become more sluggish and, if the soil ever approaches the point of saturation, the stock will surely suffer.

As the artificial heat will affect the soil in the bench in an entirely different manner from sun heat, the effect will be that the soil will dry out more rapidly when it is in close proximity to the heating pipes and where these heating pipes are under the benches, as in many cases we still find them, the greater care and watchfulness is necessary to keep the soil uniformly moist, so that the roots may not suffer.

Syringing will have to be practiced on every favorable opportunity in order to keep spider in check and particular attention should be given to corners and those parts of the house where, by reason of extra pipes, headers, etc., heat is likely to accumulate, as these are the breeding places of the pest, and if neglected become truly plague spots.

The administration of fresh air at the proper time should also receive careful attention, as this is the true source of hardy foliage of good texture and color, without which we cannot enter on the short days with a fair chance of success.

As the night hours begin to get chilly less ventilation will be required and particular care should be given to morning ventilation, raising the sashes gradually as the day warms, but never so much at a time as to lower the temperature. The same care should be exercised during the afternoon, when ventilation is being reduced, so that after each reduction there will be no appreciable raise of temperature.

Advantage should be taken of the first application of heat to paint the pipes with the sulphur mixture to eradicate any mildew that may be in the house. A little persistence in this work will soon cause it to disappear.

CUT FROM TEAS.

I have been growing roses for two years and am wondering if I am getting a fair crop. I have about 500 plants on solid beds and am giving them ordinary rose treatment. The plants stand from four to six feet high. Last season I cut nearly 10,000 roses, and from the present outlook will cut 12,000 or over from the 500 plants. L. O.

Assuming that these are tea roses, you have done fairly well, this being a fair cut from solid benches. Seeing that you have only been growing for two years you may expect to obtain a higher average with a little more experience. RIBES.

PLANTS FOR EASTER.

I would like to know if Dorothy Perkins roses that were propagated last winter can be made to bloom for next Easter? A. J. R.

Dorothy Perkins is rather more difficult to get into bloom at Easter than any of the other ramblers and to have any chance of success the plants must be strong, vigorous and the wood well ripened before they are touched by frost. They should be lifted from the field as soon as they shed their leaves, potted and placed in a cool cellar until January, when they should be gradually introduced to heat and light. Stock of the age mentioned, unless exceptionally strong, would hardly pay for the trouble. Two-year-old stock selected for forcing would be preferable. RIBES.

RENAMED ROSES.

There can be no question as to the beauty of the rose Frau Karl Druschki, a cross between Merveille de Lyon and Caroline Testout, but a doubt has arisen as to its proper name. It appears that it was exhibited at various places in Germany by its raiser, Peter Lambert, as Schnee Königin (Snow Queen), but at that time it was not in commerce. When Mr. Lambert offered it to the trade he sent it out under the name of Frau Karl Druschki. The question is, which name should have precedence? Was the exhibition of the rose without description or figure to be taken as sufficient publicity? If it was, then of course the first name ought to remain—particularly if the rose was certificated, as it probably was. But the public cares little for rules of priority; it has got to know and appreciate the rose as Frau (or Madame) Karl Druschki, and not all the congresses will be able to effect a change. It will be remembered that a similar question arose with reference to Mrs. W. J. Grant. This lovely rose was exhibited and certificated and, we believe, be-medaled under this name. The stock was sold to a firm of American nurserymen, who considered that as they had purchased the rose they had the right to name it as they chose, and thus the name Belle Siebrecht is attached to it in America. We need not enter upon the ethical question whether the purchasers were right or wrong in their procedure. Assuming for argument's sake that they were within their right, we are equally within ours by adhering to the rule of priority of publication, and in our trade catalogues and particularly in official publications, precedence should be given to the English rather than to the American lady.

Frau Karl Druschki is probably the finest white-flowered hybrid perpetual rose in cultivation. It is a good grower and free bloomer, producing freely long pointed buds and broad petals. Every rose grower should include this grand rose in his collection. It is a fine buttonhole rose.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

ORNITHOGALUM ARABICUM.

We have just received from California 500 bulbs of Ornithogalum Arabicum and would like to know how to handle them so as to have them come in for Easter as pot plants. We thought of putting five bulbs in a 6 inch pot. Will that be too many? If we plant them now will they bloom for Christmas? We also have some freesia bulbs and would like to know how to keep them so as to plant them for Easter.

A. R.

It is many years since we have seen these bulbs grown and then they were not forced. We think three bulbs in a 6-inch pot would be enough. April and May is the time this species flowers in temperate climates, so they should under glass be easily forced for Easter. I would advise potting at once and, after one watering, keep them rather dry until leaf growth begins. I scarcely think they can be flowered at Christmas.

Freesias are not properly bulbs. They are corms and will keep a long while in a dormant state if kept dry and cool. If you want to make sure of their keeping, then put the corms in perfectly dry sand and place in cool room. W. S.

SNAPDRAGONS.

I would like to say for the benefit of those who have no house for roses and would like to grow something besides carnations for cut flowers, that if they would try antirrhinums they would find something both fine and profitable. Buy the Queen of the North seed, sow it now, transplant into the bed, water, tie up and mulch the same as carnations and the result will be highly pleasing, as they are fine, both for design work and cut flowers. We have tried them for two years and will continue to grow them, for there are always new flower shoots coming on and the blooms will last for two weeks after they are cut.

W. G. Thomas.

The meeting was called to order at 10:30 p. m., President Peter Fisher in the chair. Members present were President Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.; E. G. Gillett, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. S. Wilson, Western Springs, Ill.; Wm. Weber, Oakland, Md.; Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., and a number of members of the society.

A copy of the by-laws as framed by Secretary Herr was presented for consideration and, after considerable discussion and some changes, they were ordered printed and mailed to each paid-up member of the society at least thirty days before the regular annual meeting, January 24 and 25, 1906, for final adoption.

There being no additional premiums offered for the premium list, the getting up of this list and a program for the meeting was left to be completed by mail at a later date.

HELIOTROPES.

What time should cuttings of heliotropes be planted to be in flower in 4 inch pots for Christmas? How should they be treated to produce bushy plants?

H. C. H.

Heliotropes root very poorly from cuttings taken from plants growing in the ground and plants rooted late in the spring may be carried over for Christmas. But a better way is to "strike" cuttings that have been grown inside either in pots or some plant that is planted out and has been cut back in July. The heliotrope is a quick growing, quick rooting plant and if kept shifted soon makes a large plant. It requires stopping to make a bushy plant and if stunted for root room is very liable to be attacked with rust. Cuttings rooted now or before the end of August should make good 4-inch plants by Christmas. W. S.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

It is very unlikely that any grower can show a perfectly clean bill of health as far as foliage is concerned. Lifting from the field and transplanting in the benches, no matter how carefully done, is bound to disturb the balance between roots and top, the result being more or less loss of lower foliage. Much depends on the care bestowed on the plants during the time they are getting established; still under certain weather conditions any variety will suffer somewhat. Then there are those inclined to softness in the foliage that are next to impossible to handle without sacrifice of some lower leaves.

Opinions differ as to the advisability of removing this withered foliage but like most operations there is a right time and way to obtain the best results. Beginning the work too soon, that is, before the leaves have become sufficiently dry to come away without injury to the branch, is one cause of trouble. Then, again, the average American gets very nervous over such tedious work; the job seems to drag, incompetent help is pressed into service to expedite matters, with the result that the plants are handled roughly, loosened from their hold on the soil and many branches broken.

While it is admitted to be aggravating work it pays to do it well. To allow the objectionable foliage to remain not only gives an unsightly appearance to the plants but seriously interferes with free circulation of air among the lower branches, besides furnishing a medium for the collection of moisture where fungous diseases may develop. Again, during the dark days of winter it will be very difficult to dry the foliage before night. By all means clean up the plants. When the job is done your whole establishment will look brighter.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

A meeting of the board of directors of this society was held at the Ebbitt House, Washington, D. C., immediately after the adjournment of the evening session of the S. A. F. Tuesday, August 15. All members of the society were invited to attend, said announcement being made by Secretary Stewart.

A SEASON FOR CARE.

As the season for firing approaches conditions call for careful observance in regard to watering and ventilation. The transition from natural to artificial heat is the most critical period in the life of the rose and any carelessness, neglect or ignorance in the administration of the essentials, temperature, ventilation and water, at this season, will bring dire results later on.

To properly prepare the stock for this change due regard must be taken of the fact that evaporation is on the decline and stock cannot use, with advantage, the copious supplies of water necessary during the summer months and consequently the supply must be carefully ranged to meet the diminishing wants. Root action will also become more sluggish and, if the soil ever approaches the point of saturation, the stock will surely suffer.

As the artificial heat will affect the soil in the bench in an entirely different manner from sun heat, the effect will be that the soil will dry out more rapidly when it is in close proximity to the heating pipes and where these heating pipes are under the benches, as in many cases we still find them, the

The Amateur Gardeners' Rose Book, by Dr. Julius Hoffmann. 82 pages. Leipzig: Grieben & Co., New York and London.

The latest book on the rose is by a well known German writer and deals with rose growing, not wholly amateur, as it is practiced along the Rhine. It is translated by John Weathers, F. R. H. S., and contains occasional notes by the translator pointing out differences in culture or varieties apparent to one whose experience has been in the milder if more fickle climate of the British Isles. The list of over 200 varieties which Dr. Hoffmann recommends as the choicest kinds is also supplemented by Mr. Weathers with a large number of other varieties which, he says, have been found dependable in England. His additions include Debutante and Dorothy Perkins.

The author set himself the task of dealing in a clear, concise and comprehensive manner with all matters relating to the rose, which are likely to be found of interest to the amateur rose grower and the beginner at the work, also the recording of such general information as would make the volume one of reference for the skilled and experienced grower. Various chapters cover classification of varieties, soil, propagation, garden culture, pruning, grafting, forcing, seedling raising, etc., the whole fully indexed. The translation is literal in order that the author's views may be set forth as closely as possible. Of course the practice is German, but in the preface it is recorded that "the English grower will be able to note the principal differences between some Continental methods of cultivation and those generally practiced in the United Kingdom, and he may even think it worth while to adopt some of them occasionally."

The volume is handsomely printed and twenty color-plates add much to its beauty. These show a number of characteristic and popular kinds of roses, as Rosa canina, Souv. de la Malmaison, Mme. Victor Verdier, Marechal Niel, Crimson Rambler, Kaiserin, Gruss an Teplitz, Frau Karl Druschki, etc., from original paintings, reproduced in an art printery at Stuttgart. The work is one which should find a handy shelf in any library of gardening literature.

Rockford, Ill.—Work is being rushed on H. W. Buckbee's big new range. The glazing will soon be completed.

A USEFUL PLANT.

I am sending a piece of a plant of which I would like to know the name. It is used as a border plant. W. F. D.

The small piece of plant enclosed is Santolina incana. It is used for an edging and for lines in carpet bedding. You can clip it to almost any shape, hence its usefulness for the above purposes. It is almost hardy in the eastern states. With a little protection of snow it often survives the winter. A good plan is to lift a few old plants in October and put in a cool house at New Year's. Cut them down a few inches and you will get any amount of soft cuttings, which root readily. To make nice little branching plants for flower gardening there is no place so good as a mild hotbed for the santolina in May. W. S.

TWO NOVELTIES.

I send you herewith two photographs of this year's novelties in pot plants grown at Stertzing's floral establishment, Maplewood, St. Louis county, Mo. The two tall plants in one picture represent the much praised Nicotiana Sanderæ. This plant has certainly not proven its merits in St. Louis and has disappointed the growers. It is two to three feet tall and where it is planted out it branches very profusely, making a large bush covered with flowers, which measure from three-quarters of an inch to one inch in diameter. But through the hot part of the day all the flowers shrivel up, which gives the plant a very bad aspect. The color, too, is not as good as could be desired, varying from a pale purplish-pink to a good crimson-red. This variety seems to be insufficiently fixed, judging from the variation in the color between the different specimens. This plant is not to be recommended for small yards and to use with tender bedding plants, but will do to fill in between tall, hardy perennials or flowering shrubs in borders.

The second picture is an everblooming balsam. The botanical name is Impatiens Holstii. It is a good improvement over the well known Impatiens Sultani. It has a similar growth but differs in the flower peduncle, which bears two to three flowers, instead of one as in I. Sultani. The color is a great deal better, being a rich, brilliant vermilion-red. This plant will prove itself a valuable acquisition for the florist who has a call for good house plants, for which purpose this plant is to be recommended, being most satisfactory in apartments. The picture shows a seedling from the month of March. T. G.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

By B. T. Galloway, Chief of Bureau.

[An abstract of an illustrated address delivered before the Society of American Florists at Washington, August 16, 1905.]

The work of the Bureau of Plant Industry covers many different lines, horticulture in its broadest sense being one of the most important. I cannot, of course, in an address of this kind hope to cover more than the main features of our horticultural work. I shall, however, endeavor to review briefly some of the more important problems upon which we are now engaged, or have in the recent past been engaged, problems which will appeal to you as practical men interested in commercial greenhouse and allied work.

Before entering in a general way upon the subject it may not be out of place to call your attention briefly to the progress which is being made in floricultural and horticultural work in this country. Several years ago it was my pleasure to present at a meeting of this society a paper in which I gave in detail statistics showing the growth and development of the floricultural interests in the United States. Since the presentation of that paper we have had very prosperous years, and prosperity has added to the business of the men who grow crops under glass. There have been many improvements in devices, noteworthy additions to our knowledge of greenhouse construction, and noteworthy changes which on the whole have led to the betterment of the profession. I think it may be truly said, furthermore, that there have been quite marked changes in the general attitude of the public respecting the aims and the objects, as well as the work, of such an organization as the Society of American Florists. So far as the work relating to the growing of crops under glass is concerned, I think it may be safely stated that the development within the past five years has been greater than in any similar period in the history of this society, or perhaps in the history of the country.

It is very difficult to collect reliable statistics bearing upon floriculture. We have made attempts to do this from time to time and while we believe reasonable success has accompanied our efforts there is always necessarily a considerable element of doubt, especially when it comes to the proper segregation of the crops grown. There are, however, a few statistical facts in reference to prices which might not be out of place at this time and which are based on reliable figures, that is, figures which are available in the trade journals and which, when studied, show a number of things of interest.

I would like to call your attention first to some figures in reference to the variation of prices of three of the principal greenhouse crops, namely, roses, carnations, and violets, during the past five years. These figures were obtained by a careful study of the quotations given in the trade journals. Four principal markets were selected, namely, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. The quotations for fancy stock were left out of consideration, it being thought best to consider only medium or average conditions. I shall not take the time here to give these figures in full, but a study of the table reveals the fact that there has been a constant upward tendency in the price of roses from 1900 to the present time.

Average wholesale price per 100 roses, carnations, and violets, 1900 to 1904, inclusive, in the four principal cut flower markets.

Year.	Market.	Roses.	Carnations.	Violets.
1900	Chicago	$4.43	$1.38	$0.79
	Boston	4.99	1.22	.69
	Philadelphia	5.87	1.31	.69
	New York	4.39	1.13	.70
	Average	4.79	1.26	.72
1901	Chicago	4.41	1.62	.75
	Boston	5.78	1.54	.54
	Philadelphia	6.38	1.84	.82
	New York	5.02	1.30	.62
	Average	5.40	1.57	.68
1902	Chicago	5.14	1.80	.97
	Boston	5.58	1.59	.62
	Philadelphia	6.90	1.74	.85
	New York	5.34	1.28	.64
	Average	5.74	1.60	.77
1903	Chicago	6.94	2.60	1.17
	Boston	6.41	2.14	.56
	Philadelphia	10.68	3.29	1.30
	New York	6.34	2.18	.61
	Average	7.09	2.55	.91
1904	Chicago	6.79	2.62	1.18
	Boston	5.73	1.75	.72
	Philadelphia	8.52	3.23	.75
	New York	6.19	2.70	.66
	Average	6.81	2.57	.83
General average		5.97	1.91	.78

It appears from the table that the average price of roses per hundred for each of the past five years was: 1900, $4.79; 1901, $5.40; 1902, $5.74; 1903, $7.09; 1904, $6.81. The average for the five years was $5.97 per hundred.

The average price of carnations was: 1900, $1.25; 1901, $1.57; 1902, $1.60; 1903, $2.55; 1904, $2.57. The average price of carnations for the past five years was $1.91 per hundred.

The average price of violets for each of the past five years was: 1900, 72 cents; 1901, 68 cents; 1902, 77 cents; 1903, 91 cents; 1904, 83 cents. The average for the five years was 78 cents per hundred.

After quoting certain figures to show the immense area now under glass the speaker said:

Passing now to the work of the Bureau of Plant Industry in this great field I will try to give you as briefly as I can a general idea of our facilities for the work, the various lines of investigation that we have under way and the manner in which the work is conducted.

From this point the speaker's address was illustrated with lantern slides. He stated that the object of the illustrations would be to conduct his hearers, figuratively speaking, through the various branches of the Bureau of Plant Industry in order that they might see, as well as photographs could show, the nature of the work being done by the bureau in the interests of floriculture and horticulture, how the work was conducted, and its practical application.

Attention was first called to the grounds of the Department proper, how they were handled, and the efforts that are made to utilize them for object lessons both for the visiting laymen and for those interested directly in various commercial lines. Brief mention was made of the school garden work that is being done under the auspices of the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Nicotiana Sanderae, an Over-rated Novelty.

In describing the facilities which the Department now has for carrying on the work under glass the speaker called attention to the new establishment which has recently been completed by the Lord & Burnham Co. This plant consists of thirteen houses of the most approved construction. In addition to these there are seven or eight houses in other portions of the grounds, and one large conservatory devoted entirely to economic plants and ornamentals. The thirteen houses recently constructed constitute, however, the real working equipment for carrying on the various lines of investigation that are under way. Illustrations of the houses were shown and it was pointed out how certain of them were devoted entirely to the investigation of plant diseases and how others are used for the purpose of developing plants connected with the breeding investigations carried on by George W. Oliver. Some of the houses are used for special collections, such as cacti, and others for the propagation of special plants, such as the mango and mangosteen, and other crops that are being studied with a view to introducing them into the south and other portions of our tropical possessions. The speaker also called attention to a unique feature connected with the heating of these houses, the steam being secured from a large power plant in the neighborhood. He stated that it is hoped ultimately to conduct a series of experiments for the purpose of determining the best methods of handling and paying for steam secured in this way.

Passing from the descriptive matter pertaining to the houses proper to the work which is actually being conducted in them, the speaker called special attention to the work that is being conducted on carnations and roses. The work on carnations this year has to do mainly with testing carnations grown under glass all summer as compared with those grown in the field. Work is also under way having for its object the solution of difficulties relating to selection in the growing of carnations. A system of rigid selection based on a scale of points will be inaugurated the coming year, the object being to determine the practicability of improving some of the more important varieties now in use. Considerable work in the matter of growing new seedling carnations is also being conducted by E. M. Byrnes, and a portion of the house is devoted each year to the new seedlings. Selection for resistance to disease is also a feature of this work.

Attention was next called to the work on roses and violets in the matter of selection, feeding experiments, study of diseases, etc.

One of the special features of the Bureau's work is the autumnal flower exhibition, consisting mainly of chrysanthemums. This work is carried on primarily with a view to encourage a greater interest in horticulture. The chrysanthemum shows conducted every year by the Bureau of Plant Industry and by the Propagating Gardens under the War Department are attended by great numbers of people from the city, and are very popular.

The speaker then passed to the consideration of some of the special diseases under investigation by the bureau. Attention was called to the nematode or root-rot disease of roses and the experiments that have been conducted for the purpose of preventive treatment. Illustrations were given showing the effect of soil treatment with a weak solution of formalin and it was pointed out that in badly infested beds treatment with a one per cent solution of formalin had been quite successful. Attention was also called to the various diseases of other crops, such as the spot disease of the violet, and methods of prevention; also the bud nematode and the root-knot disease of violets, and other maladies affecting this crop. The bacterial disease of calla lilies was also illustrated. It was shown how this disease affects the flower and the leaf stalks, causing both to rot away. One of the officers of the bureau, Dr. Townsend, has made an investigation of this disease and published a bulletin on the subject, showing how the disease is caused and how it may be prevented. The speaker stated that in a short lecture such as he was giving it was impracticable to go into details, but that publications on the subject of plant diseases can be obtained by addressing the Department.

The speaker stated that the florists would probably be interested, indirectly at least, in the work recently conducted by the bureau in connection with the growing of mushrooms from pure spawn. This work had been inaugurated under Albert F. Woods, in charge of vegetable pathological and physiological investigations, through Dr. B. M. Duggar, formerly a member of the bureau staff but now connected with the Missouri State University. Dr. Duggar's assistant, Mr. Ferguson, has been quite successful in developing methods for the growing of mushrooms from pure spawn. Illustrations were given showing the laboratory methods followed in developing the spawn, how the spawn is specially selected, and it was shown how the same rules which govern the selection of seed from ideal plants can be applied to mushroom culture. Illustrations were also given of the methods of making brick spawn and of mushroom establishments in which the pure spawn is used.

The speaker then took up the work on bulbs, stating that for the past two years the Department has had a bulb garden in which have been tested all the American-grown bulbs that could be obtained, and that some of the American-grown narcissi have proved very satisfactory. He stated that the Emperor is one of the best that have thus far been tried and that the Golden Spur is also very fine. He also mentioned the new Elvira variety, said to be a cross between Narcissus poeticus ornatus and polyanthus varieties, stating that it is perfectly hardy and makes a magnificent cut flower and that it forces well. Last year more than 25,000 bulbs of all kinds were planted in the Department trial grounds. The speaker also mentioned the fact that a unique display of all classes and varieties of gladioli had been planned for this year but that unfortunately the weather conditions had been unfavorable and these efforts had not met with success.

The speaker also stated that the members of the Society of American Florists as well as the American Peony Society would probably be interested in the work of the bureau in the direction of establishing standard variety collections of peony collections. He stated that last year 100 varieties were established on the Arlington Experimental Farm of the Department of Agriculture and that this year 200 varieties have been ordered, so that in a few years the Department will have a very interesting and valuable collection of peony varieties.

Illustrations were given of the bulb plantings of the Department and also of the bulb gardens of the Puget Sound region, and in California, North Carolina and Virginia. All these gardens were visited recently by Mr. Oliver and were found to be doing well. Some of the views of fields of hyacinths and narcissi in full bloom were especially interesting.

The speaker stated that probably most of the florists were more or less familiar with the work that Mr. Oliver is doing on improving the lily, but that it might be well to call attention to this work anew and to point out some of the recent developments. Some important work is now under way in the matter of growing new hybrid lilies. The possibility of growing lilies commercially from seed is believed to have been demonstrated. Illustrations were given showing lilies with ten or twelve flowers grown in fourteen months from seed. Publications of the bureau bearing on the subject were referred to from which those interested could obtain full data.

Another special feature of the work under glass mentioned by the speaker is the attempt to produce new types of lettuce by crossing. This work has been carried on for two years or more with very favorable results. Many successful crosses have been made by Mr. Oliver and the resultant plants are in many cases showing features of considerable promise. More than 6,000 plants were grown the past summer on the Department grounds for the purpose of eliminating by selection certain undesirable qualities of the new types. The object of all this work is to secure types better adapted for growth under glass. The speaker stated that for a number of years he had been interested in lettuce and in growing it had endeavored as accurately as possible to determine the weak points of the different varieties as well as their strong points. With the knowledge acquired in this way certain ideals were formulated and the main object of this work was to see if those ideals could not be secured by bringing together types in which certain of the ideal elements were present. The ideal elements which in the judgment of the speaker were essential were pointed out and discussed. It was stated that further selection work was necessary before seed could be distributed, but as soon as it was ready it would be sent out to those interested in the growing of this crop.

The speaker dwelt at some length on the fact just stated, namely, that the efforts of the Department were wholly in the direction of aiding the florists and horticulturists in every way within its power and that no discrimination whatever would be made in sending out material wherever such material was thought to give promise of value.

Attention was also called to other lines of plant breeding work, mostly conducted by Mr. Oliver. Roses, clematis, and several other ornamental crops were mentioned in this connection.

The speaker concluded his address by referring to some of the newer plants in which the florists and horticulturists are either directly or indirectly interested. Special attention was called to the collection of spineless cacti now being brought together for the purpose of distribution in the west with a view to improving forage conditions. Mention was also made of a number of tropical and semi-tropical plants, such as the mango and mangosteen, which are being grown, propagated and developed under Mr. Oliver's direction with a view to introducing these crops more extensively into Florida. Attention was also called to a number of other new or rare plants which are still under investigation and which it was stated would be disseminated later if they were found to be of value.

BEDS FOR LETTUCE.

I am planning to build a greenhouse to be used for vegetable forcing, particularly lettuce, and would like a little information regarding solid beds. My land is quite high, the subsoil, a retentive clay with occasional streaks of sand; the soil a sandy loam, and lies in such a position that, when properly graded, it will not require tile drainage. If I make my solid beds so that the surface will be one foot above the walks, will it be necessary to use cinders for drainage? If so, about how much would you advise?

W. K.

Your location and soil formation are all right for growing lettuce without the use of drainage in any shape or form. It is all the better to raise the beds so that the surface will be one foot above the walks; it makes them much easier to reach. There is no need to use cinders; the lettuce will succeed better without them; they would only obstruct capillary attraction and rob your plants of the advantage of underground moisture. Under certain conditions they might be necessary, but not in your case seeing that your elevation is high enough that your soil can be graded to insure against subterranean water being stagnant near the surface. The nature of your surface soil being sandy, considerable moisture will be lost by evaporation, but the heavy subsoil, being more retentive, will have the advantage of retaining moisture enough to support your plants without the too frequent application of water, and this in the dull, short days of winter you will find to be a great benefit in the prevention of fungus diseases.

PARSLEY.

From parsley seed sown in July the plants should by this time be pretty well up, and if they have come up thickly this is a good time to thin them out. They do not need to be thinned out to single plants, as they can be lifted in clumps, but if they are too thick the roots would be so small and weak at lifting time that it would take them a long time to produce foliage large enough to be fit for market, and the chances are that they would never produce a first-class article. If thinned out so that they can be lifted about three plants to a clump they give the most satisfactory results, as each individual has a chance to fully develop. Some practice the single-plant system, but from these, although the product can be relied on to be first-class, with good cultivation, the returns at the end of the season generally fall short, as parsley is one of the things that are not wanted too large. Three average-size leaves are preferable to one large one.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society Celebrating its Twenty-first Anniversary, August 24, 1905.

To have the plants ready to give a supply by the time the outdoor article is cut down by frost, they should be put in the benches not later than the first of October. Parsley is pretty hardy and, with the protection of boards on cold nights, can be depended on to keep up the supply until the end of November in an average season.

This crop does well either in raised benches or solid beds, but we prefer the latter, as the soil is warmer and growth rather faster. A bench about six inches deep is about the best, the bottom being open enough to allow of free drainage. The soil should be of a light nature rather than too heavy, and very fresh manure should be avoided. A good sprinkling of well rotted manure well mixed through the soil is beneficial. Later on liquid manure can be applied to sustain the crop when the bench becomes well filled with roots and the soil begins to lose its feeding qualities, or a top-dressing of soil and well rotted manure in equal portions may be given to advantage. To procure the best results the temperature of the house should not run higher than 45 to 50 degrees at night with fire heat. More heat than this is conducive to red spider and green-fly, the two insects that are most liable to prove troublesome, but neither of them is apt to put in appearance unless the atmosphere of the house is kept too warm and too dry. A plentiful supply of water is necessary when the plants are growing freely, but care must of course be used to not overdo it, so that the soil will become heavy and cloggy, or slow growth and yellow foliage will result.

The White Fly.

I would be very much disappointed if you were to tell me that there has been enough written about the white fly. I think that there cannot be too much written about such a troublesome pest. Would some subscriber of the Review please make known the results he has had in using potassium cyanide for white flies so that it could be easily understood?

I used the usual formula as frequently published, when the houses were filled with plants, but with no results. After the houses were empty I used it as strong as one pound to a house 20x100. The houses were as tight as they could be. I went to the trouble of trying a box outside, filled with such plants as were most affected, such as pelargoniums and fuchsias. I made the box just as tight as I could and gave them a strong dose of potassium cyanide, so strong that it killed some of the plants, but none of the white fly.

I have been fighting this pest for over a year now and so far I have not found any way to get rid of it. I would like to know the results some florist has had who also was troubled with this pest.

NEW ORLEANS.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society took place Thursday evening, August 24. The weather was so warm that the general routine business was quickly transacted. On motion of Chas. Ebele a committee was appointed to draw a memorial to be sent to the family of Mrs. P. M. Walmsley, who died a short time ago. The lady was highly appreciated by the florists, having on many occasions done much toward the advancement of the society. President Chopin appointed on this committee Chas. Ebele, C. W. Eichling and Paul Abele.

The most important event of the evening was the celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the society. It was done in great southern style, nearly every member participating at the banquet. The membership now numbers forty-two. The hall was profusely decorated with plants and flowers. The tables were partly covered with fine specimen plants of Adiantum Croweanum furnished by P. A. Chopin. The toasts were many. Chas. Ebele, acting as master of ceremonies, called on F. Baker, who was the first president at the organization of the society in 1885. Mr. Baker spoke of the good that the society has been doing in the past and of its constant progress. C. W. Eichling said that its future was still more promising. C. R. Panter wanted an interstate organization to be formed for the advancement of the art, believing that one society could help the other and bring everything to a higher standard. He also made a few remarks on the importance of having a regular price on plants and not to try to undermine each other.

E. Valdejo addressed the young members, telling them to be ready for our coming fall show. Nothing will bring up business quicker than exhibitions. Jos. Steckler and James Newsham made a few remarks on the same subject. Chas. Ebele said he was surprised to see so many young men going into the business, even boys starting to grow plants for the love of the work and making a success at once. Our business is certainly great, he said, the greatest of all. In fact we only wish that our northern brother florists who sent us a telegram of sympathy from the convention at Washington could have been among our crowd Thursday evening. They would have found everything merry, full of joy and enthusiasm. All the same, their good remembrance was deeply felt and appreciated by every member.

TROUBLE WITH CHIMNEY.

We have trouble with our chimney. We are on high ground. The chimney is forty-three feet high and twenty-seven inches square on the inside and we have twenty-three feet of grate. Most of the time it makes a very hot fire and the grate gets melting hot, but does not make steam, and at other times the fire seems purpose of preventive treatment. Illustrations were given showing the effect of soil treatment with a weak solution of formalin and it was pointed out that in badly infested beds treatment with a one per cent solution of formalin had been quite successful. Attention was also called to the various diseases of other crops, such as the spot disease of the violet, and methods of prevention; also the bud nematode and the root-knot disease of violets, and other maladies affecting this crop. The bacterial disease of calla lilies was also illustrated. It was shown how this disease affects the flower and the leaf stalks, causing both to rot away. One of the officers of the bureau, Dr. Townsend, has made an investigation of this disease and published a bulletin on the subject, showing how the disease is caused and how it may be prevented. The speaker stated that in a short lecture such as he was giving it was impracticable to go into details, but that publications on the subject of plant diseases can be obtained by addressing the Department.

The speaker stated that the florists would probably be interested, indirectly at least, in the work recently conducted by the bureau in connection with the growing of mushrooms from pure spawn. This work had been inaugurated under Albert F. Woods, in charge of vegetable pathological and physiological investigations, through Dr. B. M. Duggar, formerly a member of the bureau staff but now connected with the Missouri State University. Dr. Duggar's assistant, Mr. Ferguson, has been quite successful in developing methods for the growing of mushrooms from pure spawn. Illustrations were given showing the laboratory methods followed in developing the spawn, how the spawn is specially selected, and it was shown how the same rules which govern the selection of seed from ideal plants can be applied to mushroom culture. Illustrations were also given of the methods of making brick spawn and of mushroom establishments in which the pure spawn is used.

The speaker then took up the work on bulbs, stating that for the past two years the Department has had a bulb garden in which have been tested all the American-grown bulbs that could be obtained, and that some of the American-grown narcissi have proved very satisfactory. He stated that the Emperor is one of the best that have thus far been tried and that the Golden Spur is also very fine. He also mentioned the new Elvira variety, said to be a cross between Narcissus poeticus ornatus and polyanthus varieties, stating that it is perfectly hardy and makes a magnificent cut flower and that it forces well. Last year more than 25,000 bulbs of all kinds were planted in the Department trial grounds. The speaker also mentioned the fact that a unique display of all classes and varieties of gladioli had been planned for this year but that unfortunately the weather conditions had been unfavorable and these efforts had not met with success.

The speaker also stated that the members of the Society of American Florists as well as the American Peony Society would probably be interested in the work of the bureau in the direction of establishing standard variety collections of peony collections. He stated that last year 100 varieties were established on the Arlington Experimental Farm of the Department of Agriculture and that this year 200 varieties have been ordered, so that in a few years the Department will have a very interesting and valuable collection of peony varieties.

Illustrations were given of the bulb plantings of the Department and also of the bulb gardens of the Puget Sound region, and in California, North Carolina and Virginia. All these gardens were visited recently by Mr. Oliver and were found to be doing well. Some of the views of fields of hyacinths and narcissi in full bloom were especially interesting.

The speaker stated that probably most of the florists were more or less familiar with the work that Mr. Oliver is doing on improving the lily, but that it might be well to call attention to this work anew and to point out some of the recent developments. Some important work is now under way in the matter of growing new hybrid lilies. The possibility of growing lilies commercially from seed is believed to have been demonstrated. Illustrations were given showing lilies with ten or twelve flowers grown in fourteen months from seed. Publications of the bureau bearing on the subject were referred to from which those interested could obtain full data.

Another special feature of the work under glass mentioned by the speaker is the attempt to produce new types of lettuce by crossing. This work has been carried on for two years or more with very favorable results. Many successful crosses have been made by Mr. Oliver and the resultant plants are in many cases showing features of considerable promise. TROUBLE WITH CHIMNEY.

We have trouble with our chimney. We are on high ground. The chimney is forty-three feet high and twenty-six inches square on the inside and we have twenty-three feet of grate. Most of the time it makes a very hot fire and the grate gets melting hot, but does not make steam, and at other times the fire seems to granulate and will not burn dry pine with the doors closed. We are going to rebuild the chimney. Will you please tell us how large a round chimney should be on the inside? The height is about forty to forty-five feet. E. T. H.

The chimney you have is, if anything a little too large for the grate area—usually a good fault. I would suggest that perhaps your grate bars are too close and that you have been endeavoring to run too heavy, i. e., too deep or thick a fire. If a modification of the grates, by removing one bar and respacing them, does not improve conditions look to the flues; clean them every twenty-four hours, and as a last resort with open grates and clean flues raise the height of the chimney five feet. If the chimney must be rebuilt decrease the area slightly. A chimney twenty-two inches in diameter should be large enough for your purpose. Look up the articles on firing in the Review. L. C. C.

PROPAGATING BEDDERS.

I would like to have some information as to the rooting of cuttings of geraniums, fuchsias, pelargoniums, vincas and petunias. At what temperature should the sand be kept and also at what temperature should the house be kept day and night? When should the cuttings be started to have them in bloom for the spring trade? A. J. R.

Although these are all very familiar plants, there is quite a difference in the method of propagation and to cover the subject properly would take a little book, so I will condense as much as possible.

All kinds of flowering geraniums root from September 1 until frost. No bottom heat is essential and they are just as well potted firmly in 2-inch or 2½-inch pots. Variegated and scented geraniums are better put into sand during September and October, but no bottom heat is necessary. The show pelargonium should be propagated early in September, either in small pots or flats of sand, with no bottom heat.

It is useless to attempt to propagate fuchsias until you can procure young, succulent cuttings from the old plants that have rested in October and November and have been pruned and started in heat. This is usually the end of November or December. These green, tender cuttings root very freely in sand at a temperature of 60 or 65 degrees and the atmosphere at 50 degrees.

Put vincas into sand at the end of September or early in October, with or without bottom heat, and give them lots of water. Discard the very tender tips of the long growths, also the woody growth. Vincas are slow to root in the fall, but will all root in time if kept moist and not allowed to wilt.

You should not bother with petunias unless it be some very choice double varieties. Seed sown in February will produce fine healthy plants, both double and single flowers, and be in bloom from the middle to the end of May. Any plant you wish to propagate cut back now and place some pulverized manure beneath the growths. In three or four weeks you will have young, succulent growths that root freely. They are all the better if you have a slight bottom heat in the sand. W. S.

JAPANESE NOVELTIES.

Among the novelties of Suzuki & Iida, New York and Yokohama, is Aralia cordata, the Japanese udo, a new winter salad—a perennial plant of the order of Araliaceæ, growing wild in hilly regions, also extensively cultivated in farm lands. Its young and tender stalks are eaten as a vegetable in Japan. There are two varieties of udo, called respectively Moyashi or malt-udo and Kan or winter-udo. These, though of similar appearance, are quite differently cultivated. The growing of these forms is an important part of market-gardening; this plant also, when fully grown, forms a splendid ornamental plant five to six feet high, with large compound leaves in bush form.

They also offer Eutrema wasabi, the Japanese horse-radish. There is a fresh sharpness about Japanese wasabi that not even the finest Austrian sorts of horse-radish possess. The color, too, is not generally white, but a delicate shade of green, and, although served in much the same way that horse-radish is served in America, it is quite a different thing. The roots, which are grated to prepare this appetizer, are produced by a plant of the same family as the true horse-radish.

D. G. Fairchild, the agricultural explorer of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, among "finds" in his recent tour in Japan, introduces these plants to the western public's attention, and full descriptions are given in Bulletin No. 42 of that department.

KANSAS CITY.

Looking Backward.

Looking back over thirty years of life as a florist, seeing the gradual growth of the business, until the last ten years, when energy and perseverance have brought the profession up with giant strides, to the position it now holds as one of the recognized professions of the world, how many of us old-timers look back to the days when we struggled from hand to mouth and remember those who used to struggle, when we did, when the city in which we now live was only a village? Some have passed over the Great Divide, but those who are left can get together once in a while and talk over the early days. Such has been the experience of your correspondent, who has had the pleasure of old time reminiscences, of times even before he entered the field. To R. S. Brown and others he is indebted for the following:

When this city was only a village on the banks of the Missouri and the main street was only a few blocks long, an old German gardener named E. Schwanefeldt, planted the first seed in what has since proven a fertile field. With only one small house, close to the river, and no other greenhouse for hundreds of miles, he carried on a thriving business with the new settlers and with those who followed the Santa Fe trail into the far western country. This was about 1858.

As the village gradually grew, L. A. Goodman entered the field and between raising vegetables for the settlers and some few common flowers, was able to do quite a business for early times.

Next came A. D. Adkins, who started up in 1862, and was about the first who made any headway. Then came Geo. Bowsley in 1863, who did not stay very long in business. Those were the days when every man was his own carpenter and when the lumber market was so far away and the freight so excessive that any old lumber was good enough to build with, and what houses they had!

Richard Jarrett came in 1866 and located in what was then the jungles and did a thriving business. Next on the list was D. W. Manning, who built at Twentieth and Broadway in 1868 with corn fields all around him. This place being out of the usual route he changed his place to Fifteenth and Campbell. The town growing in that direction he was forced to move, going to Fifteenth and Euclid, where he stayed until he gave up business. G. Whalen came in 1869, but not knowing much of the business was compelled to abandon it.

Then R. S. Brown started up in 1870 in a very small way, combining gardening with the cultivation of a few flowers until his flower business demanded all of his attention and he gave up gardening. He then went into the wholesale business and became so sucecssful that he became practically the first real florist in the city. He has been thirty-seven years in his present location and is today the oldest living florist in Kansas City, having come here in 1852.

Next on the list was a Mr. Whiting, who started at Thirty-third and Prospect. This place was bought by H. Probst, who in turn gave way to S. Murray, who is still doing business at the same place. In 1881 Mr. Heite started in business at Thirty-second and Holmes, but being crowded out by the building of residences all around him, was forced to tear down and moved to Merriam, Kan., a suburban town, where he is still doing an excellent business.

In 1882 came a Mr. Ingram, who stayed in business but a few years and the property where the greenhouses stood becoming valuable, they were torn down to make room for houses.

Chas. Hampton comes next with a greenhouse on stilts at what is now the junction. This property at that time was an immense gully and in order to bring his houses on a level with the street he was forced to build them on stilts, and for a time did a rushing business, but the march of modern improvements drove him out. The gully was filled up and modern business blocks now occupy the site.

Edward Bunyar came next with a small house on Oak street, where he did a small business until 1887, when he moved to Rosedale, Kan., where, until his death this spring, he was more or less successful.

Mr. Adkins, retiring from business, James Payne took his place at Twelfth and Porter, and did a very successful business until a few years ago, when a severe hailstorm almost ruined him and he was forced to begin life anew. That he made a success goes without saying, as he has today one of the neatest little places here.

After Chas. Hampton moved his greenhouses to Ninth and Brooklyn, A. Barbe took hold of them and although a stranger with but very little capital, became a ward of the goddess of fortune and after moving a couple of times located for good at Fifteenth and Lawndale avenue, where he is still doing an excellent business with one of the most up-to-date establishments in the city.

Following in line comes Charles Heite, who, becoming cramped for room, left the paternal roof and started a business for himself at Merriam, Kan., where he did a thriving business until about five years ago, when he entered into a partnership with W. L. Rock, and located at Sixty-fifth and Troost avenue, where they have achieved remarkable success and are today among our representative men.

W. J. Barnes comes next in the list, starting in business with a capital of $45 and an unlimited amount of stick-to-it-iveness. He built a lean-to against the south side of his dwelling and by economical expenditures and hard work made for himself a place in the business world and today is the proud possessor of over 10,000 feet of glass, a modern home and a bank balance that makes some of us green with envy.

This, with possibly, one or two exceptions, is the history of the florists' business in this town; a history of hard knocks, of unselfish devotion to the profession in the face of what seemed at that time unsurmountable obstacles; where it became a work of love to educate the people; where fortunes were not made, but where a living was procured, but only by almost superhuman efforts; where the man worked all day and his wife helped to fire at night, struggling to make both ends meet. There are only a few of the old ones left. Brown, Adkins, Manning, Murray, Bridgeland, Heite and Payne are all that are left, the others having gone on before, leaving behind them a memory dear to us and of which we love to speak. And when we gather together in the potting shed we love to call up the days we worked and fought for a living, until today we can look back on our early struggles with a sigh of satisfaction that for us the struggle is over and the path made easier for those who follow.

NARCISSUS.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

"Better, thank you," is the general response when inquiry is made as to the condition of the market. Not with reference to prices, which remain "about the same" as the doctor says of his patient with a slow fever, but as to cleaning up, which was really quite encouraging on Monday, when the evening found the ice-boxes empty. But it was pathetic to see a box of Brides and Maids, over 300 of them, go for $2, and from this may be gathered a fair idea of what the New York wholesale market is in August. But everybody is satisfied and happy, for conditions are exactly as they have been other years at this date and nothing more is expected.

Everybody is comfortable in his clean and redecorated store. The help has had its outing and everybody has a coat of tan. The principals are well rested and for necessary excitement to keep the blood in motion have had Saratoga and now Sheepshead Bay to draw upon. There is really nothing to discourage anybody. Everyone looks healthy and cheerful and all are ready for the best season in our experience.

American Beauties are of a little better quality and abundant. All roses show the symptoms of improvement. Carnations are short-stemmed and scarce. Lilies of all kinds are in full supply. Orchids are few and far between and prices are maintained. Mr. McManus entertained one of his New Orleans customers last week, who was loud in praise of safe shipment to that far away city.

Nobody seems to want dahlias yet. One wholesaler expressed himself concerning them in the old familiar way: "We can't give them away." Some splendid stock of gladioli is in the market and floods of the common kinds. Cosmos has given sweet peas a deserved vacation. The retail windows are full of paniculata. The price seldom goes above $10 per thousand. There seems to be no end of it and every garden in and around New York within a radius of fifty miles is full of it. It is surely the suburbanites' most popular flower and deserves to be.

September, with its school and theater re-openings, will mark the opening of the new season and start the retail wheels in motion. For weeks there has been literally no business in the New York retail stores. Those who migrate to Newport report a boom.

Various Notes.

The fall exhibitions are very near. The seventy-fourth fair of the American Institute will take place at the Berkeley Lyceum, 19 West Forty-fourth street, on September 20 and 21. Many premiums for plants, flowers, fruits and vegetables will be given, while the great exhibition of farm and garden crops and the big chrysanthemum show will be held at the Herald Square exhibition hall October 31 to November 3.

On September 11 the New York Florists' Club opens its fall and winter season. This will be herbaceous plant night and a fine exhibit is anticipated. An invitation is extended to all the members to make displays and Secretary Young will, as usual, take good care of the shipments. Every member of the club is requested to be present. There are many matters of importance to be discussed. The question box will be relieved of its summer accumulation and everyone who was at the Washington convention will relate his experience. Mr. O'Mara will be back from Portland and Mr. Nugent never fails in exceeding what is expected of him in provision for the demands of appetite.

The Clucas & Boddington Co. is sending out hundreds of sample boxes of twenty-five varieties of phlox from their collection of forty, some of recent European introduction. They report a great demand for them. The firm has thirty-five acres at Sparkill now devoted to herbaceous perennials and evergreens.

Hall and Allen, of the McManus staff, are back from the Catskills.

Mr. and Mrs. Guttman enjoyed a continuance of their convention holiday at Philadelphia and Atlantic City.

N. Lecakes & Co. have a new front in keeping with the palatial wholesale stores of Twenty-eighth street.

Phil Hauswirth and the Poehlmann Brothers voted Ford Bros.' ice-box the finest in the country.

Ed. Winterson and wife made a brief call here on their homeward journey. So did George Asmus and wife and Mrs. Kreitling, all of Chicago, and several other modest westerners who forgot to register, Mr. Valentine, of far away Denver, among them. Many others from the east and north stopped over for a day.

Herbert Greensmith is back from Europe.

Fred S. Peterson has gone to Rochester and will join the office force of Mandeville & King, the seedsmen. Mr. Peterson has been for some years with Wm. Elliott & Sons and before that with Weeber & Don, Landreth and Peter Henderson & Co. He began his career in Edinburgh, with Downie & Land, and was afterwards in the employ of Little & Ballantyne, the largest seed merchants in the north of England. He is an able man, very popular with the gardeners.

Mr. Nash is still shaking hands with himself because of his narrow escape and nursing his bruises. Mrs. Nash will return next week from her summer trip with her daughter in Germany.

Miss Anna Dorrance, of Dorranceton, Pa., left last week for a tour in Great Britain and the continent.

Harry Bunyard is still wrestling with a severe attack of rheumatism and his friends all wish him a speedy recovery.

Wm. H. Gunther has had a happy summer outing with his family at the favorite Jersey resorts. He has increased his store in size and facilities meantime, so he has now one of the largest places in the wholesale district.

All who attended the Washington convention have returned more than delighted with their experiences. There seems to be but perfect and general satisfaction. The grand treatment accorded everybody by the Washington and Baltimore boys will never be forgotten.

Bowe has repainted and brilliantly lighted his store "in the heart of New York" and is ready for a big winter season.

Myer Otherl, of Guttman's, is off on a two weeks' vacation.

A new wholesale firm, Starkey & Kline, has been formed for the sale of plants and will occupy the present store of A. J. Guttman after his removal to 43 West Twenty-eighth street about October 1.

L. Mutinos will on Saturday open a very pretty store at 1274 Broadway. His stand at Twenty-third street was for years a prosperous one and he has advanced into the realm of the bon tons.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Sufficient stock continues to come in for requirements, as the demand remains comparatively light. Roses are rather more plentiful. Quite a number of the new crop of Brides and Maids are arriving, but these are mostly small. Prices on tea roses have varied from $1 to $8 per hundred. Beauties are coming of very good quality for the season. Prices remain about the same on these. Some very good Wellesley are now seen at the stores. These sell well. Carnations are decidedly scarce. They have averaged $2 per hundred, some going higher and poor ones lower. Sweet peas are practically done for the season. Asters have sold at better prices, 50 cents per hundred being prevailing prices, some extra fine white and light pink flowers making $1.50. There has only been a fair demand for gladioli. Speciosum lilies from outside are appearing, the white selling best. Dahlias are seen, but are not good sellers in our market.

The Exhibition.

The last of the free weekly prize exhibitions of the season was held on August 26. The exhibits were varied and interesting and filled the main exhibition hall. It being aster day, there was an extensive display of these flowers. For fifty vases in not less than twelve varieties there were seven entries, the successful contestants being Mrs. L. M. Towle, H. B. Watts and Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener, in order named. For thirty varieties herbaceous plants Blue Hill Nurseries won with a splendid assortment.

Harvard Botanic Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener, staged a very large collection of herbaceous plants, two large tables of asters and one of tuberous begonias. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a general display, W. G. Winsor and A. F. Johnson large collections of dahlias, those from the latter being all seedlings. Blue Hill Nurseries had a fine collection of perennial phloxes. From the Boston park department came a fine collection of viburnums in fruit which proved very attractive. Some of the sorts shown were: V. Opulus (several forms), dentatum, Lentago, Lantana, Sargentii, venosum, dilatatum, cassinoides and pubescens. There were the usual large displays of fruit, vegetables and fungi.

Various Notes.

The annual auction sale of stalls in the Park street flower market took place on August 26 and drew a very large attendance. James F. Carroll officiated as auctioneer. Bidding was remarkably keen and premiums ruled much higher than in 1904. First choice went to Peirce Bros. for $115. William Sim secured two at $90 each. In all nearly 100 stalls were disposed of at a premium of $4,000. This is in addition to a rental of $20 per annum each. The premiums aggregated about double those of a year ago and quite a number of new stallholders have joined the market. Indications are that more floor space will be needed ere long.

Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Comley have returned from a six weeks' visit to relatives in England and report delightful weather and an enjoyable time.

The directors of the Music Hall market anticipate a good sale of stalls at their auction on August 30.

H. H. Rogers, of Sudbury, has been shipping exceptionally fine Semple and Comet asters to the Park street market. These bring $1.50 per hundred.

Fletcher, of Auburndale, finds Physostegia Virginica excellent in design work. He has grown all the newest sweet peas the past season and has sold quite a number of outdoor grown flowers at 60 cents per hundred. His new Easigold chrysanthemum is looking well.

The proposed big exhibition of the S. A. F. in Boston next March is exciting considerable interest. As the Carnation Society meets late in January and the Rose Society joins with the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's spring exhibition in March it looks like almost a plethora of shows unless some amalgamation can be arranged.

T. F. Galvin had a beautiful window of choice nymphæas the past week. In orchids some fine Lælia elegans and Oncidium varicosum Rogersii were noted.

W. N. Craig.

HYDRANGEAS OF GUERNSEY.

Horticultural visitors to the Island of Guernsey at this time of year (and there are many of them) cannot but be struck by the magnificent examples of Hydrangea Hortensia, which abound in all parts of the island. Not only do they luxuriate and reach such proportions as can only be met with at home in the southern countries, but the cœrulean hue of the great masses of bloom, so interesting and sought after by English growers, appears to be the rule.

Looking at them, one almost wonders why the islanders, who appear to export everything they can, even if they go short themselves, do not try to place this bloom upon the markets, where its novelty, apart from its unique coloring, would appeal to sellers and buyers alike. Perhaps the great difficulty would be to preserve its freshness en route.

The "blueness" of the hydrangea has been a theme of discussion time and again in the horticultural press, so I do not intend to discuss it now. I only record the fact that nearly all the hydrangeas in the island are of that most desirable hue, and that fact should perhaps be of assistance to those who wish to penetrate the cause of that blueness. The soil is mostly disintegrated granite; the sea breezes sweep over every perch of land, and somewhere among these conditions those causes must be sought.—Horticultural Advertiser.

BOUVARDIAS IN SUMMER.

Some years ago, when small neat flowers were far more appreciated for sprays, buttonholes and similar purposes than they are now, I used, when all danger from frosts was over, to plant out the old bouvardias in a sheltered part of the reserve garden, where, supplied with water, they could always be depended upon to keep up a succession of their charming flowers throughout the summer. These came in no great quantity it is true, but a useful picking could always be obtained. I was, however, greatly surprised to see such neat, grandly flowered plants of several varieties in an exhibit at the recent Chelsea show, the plants being as fresh and full of bloom as we are accustomed to see them some two or three months later.

The following were the most prominent of the varieties shown: Humboldtii corymbiflora, which has always been earlier in flowering than the others, its long-tubed, pure white, highly fragrant flowers being much admired; Priory Beauty, a rather pleasing shade of pink; The Bride, a rather small, pure white flower; President Cleveland, bright dazzling scarlet, a good grower, and decidedly the best of its color. The above are all single-flowered varieties, but the following two doubles were equally fine: President Garfield, light pink; and Alfred Neuner, pure white. Apart from its beauty, this last is of especial interest as it was the first double-flowered bouvardia in cultivation, having been sent to England from the United States, where it originated as a sport about twenty-five years ago.—Gardeners' Magazine.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Very encouraging reports are made in the city and vicinity as to the state of trade. The weather is considerably cooler and the change brings with it a corresponding increase in business. Some of the stores have had very large funeral orders. The past week has eclipsed the corresponding week of last year in the amount of sales, with prices much better. Roses are coming in much better and prices have advanced a trifle. Carnations are still "out of sight." Asters were in good demand, owing to their adaptability for funeral work. The demand for such outdoor flowers as gladioli, tritomas, rudbeckias, etc., has fallen off considerably and very little business is expected in that line from now on.

Various Notes.

The florists of Kansas City organized a bowling club and held their first meeting last Tuesday evening at Geo. M. Kellogg's. The following officers were elected: Lawrence Schwager, president; Ed Ellsworth, secretary; F. Fromhold, treasurer. A contract was made with the Royal alleys for the first and third Tuesday nights in each month. Geo. M. Kellogg has donated a silver cup valued at $50 to be competed for the week of the flower show and other firms have signified their intention of donating prizes of equal value to be competed for by the florists visiting the show. An effort will be made to interest the ladies so that they, too, will come in for a share of the good things.

A new firm has started in business here, at 403 E. Fifteenth street, under the firm name of De Nys & Co. They will carry a full line of cut flowers and plants.

Miss Alma Beeler, with Geo. M. Kellogg, returned the last of the week from a two weeks' vacation.

Miss J. E. Murray has made quite a change in her store. The decorators took charge some days ago and a decided improvement is seen. Miss Murray reports business as very fair the past week.

W. L. Morris, of Des Moines, Ia., was a visitor here last week and took part in the bowling with the boys Tuesday night.

Lawrence Schwager has purchased as fine a lot of kentias as has been seen here for some time. He has become an enthusiastic bowler and the visiting brothers must look out when they go up against him.

Ed Ellsworth has taken to attending weddings these days. What with his duties as secretary for the club, and his practice for the championship cup, coupled with his increasing business, he is on the jump.

The report from that genial, all-round good fellow, Arthur Newell, is that the past week's business has been the best for this time of the year he has had in years. A call at his store is one of the pleasures of a visit to Kansas City.

Arnold Ringier, of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, blew into this city last week on his rounds and all the boys were glad, for when he comes he brings a lot of new yarns and gives the boys something to think of until he comes again.

Other visitors were Mr. Weppner, of the Geo. Wittbold Co., Chicago, and E. D. Sifert, of Dayton, O. Narcissus.

White Marsh, Md.—R. Vincent, Jr., & Son are putting an addition to their extensive plant by the erection of a new office and packing house 30x210 feet, four stories high, the first floor or base-basement to be used for storage of dahlias, etc. It also will contain an electric plant. The second floor is for offices and the packing department, the two upper floors for storage of boxes, baskets, etc. There will be elevator and all other modern conveniences.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There has been little change in market conditions in the past week. This is fortunate, for whatever change there has been was for the worse. The weather has continued quite warm and it has had the result of making the stock retrograde in quality.

The supplies of Beauties are above normal for the season, but prices are satisfactory, for the stock averages of very good quality. Kaiserin is the leader on the small roses, but a number of growers are now cutting Brides and Bridesmaids of very fair size and stem for so early in the season and it looks as though the plants were in shape to give very good results this fall. Liberty is in fair supply and also Chatenay, but the latter is not a hot weather rose. A few good Meteors are seen. Good roses are selling well but it is next to impossible to do anything with the large proportion of short, soft flowers.

There are few carnations in the market and none are of what could be called better than fair quality. The many rains have injured the outdoor blooms and no one is cutting anything to speak of under glass. But the absence of the carnation is not deeply felt, because of the large receipts of asters, some of which are of splendid quality. While the receipts are more than the market can consume, and averages are not high, the best asters are selling up to $3 and occasionally $4 per hundred. Many growers report that the carnation plants are soft and small and are not likely to produce early crops of good quality. The late asters should be very good property.

Gladioli continue in very large supply. A few sweet peas are again seen. Lilies are still plentiful and garden flowers of all seasonable kinds are to be had at cheap prices. Retail business consists largely of funeral work and for this purpose the outdoor flowers are not wanted. A few Tritoma Pfitzeri are received and make attractive window displays.

Handling Roses.

When a Chicagoan goes away from home it is his practice to boom his town. Chicago had many boomers at the convention, but one of them encountered a set-back when he tried to tell a leading retailer inside the Chicago shipping radius that he ought to buy his roses in this city. The retailer said that the Chicago stock reached him so badly bruised by careless handling that he could not use it for good trade and that the past season he bought most of his stock from a Canadian grower and paid a duty of twenty-five percent, making it cost more than the best stock from Chicago. He ventured the opinion that the careless handling is not in the wholesale houses, but on the part of the growers themselves. They do not seem to appreciate the importance of handling good stock well and packing it so that it will retain its freshness. This is a point not difficult to remedy and every wholesaler and every grower should give it his attention.

Death of George Piepgras.

George Piepgras died at Mercy hospital August 21, of Bright's disease. He was forty-two years of age and a well known figure in the wholesale market, having at one time been engaged in the commission business on his own account. Lately he had been employed by the Benthey-Coatsworth Co. and by J. B. Deamud. He left a wife and a large family of children.

Various Notes.

Monday, September 4, is Labor day and there will be but one mail delivery. Those sending orders to this market should wire unless they can post the letter to reach Chicago by 7 a. m. that day.

C. L. Washburn and son are on their annual fishing expedition in Wisconsin. They expect to return about September 15.

John Degnan, of the E. F. Winterson Co., is back at his desk after several days spent at home suffering with a poisoning in his face. Mrs. L. H. Winterson is convalescing from an attack of typhoid fever.

Paul Beyer has returned from a visit in New York. He will henceforth be located at South Bend, Ind., his old home.

E. C. Amling has spent a few days visiting growers and others north of town as far as Milwaukee. He reports that in some places the carnation plants are above usual condition at this season but that in other places the stock is small and soft because of so much rain.

E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., is in Canada, and expects to be absent until September 15.

Kroeschell Bros. Co. report a very good season but with orders rather later than usual in coming in. Fred Lautenschlager is on the road for them and is now in the east.

Fred Dietsch, Louis Wittbold and D. D. English returned from the convention on the morning of August 23. At South Chicago the engine of their train went into a ditch and they received quite a shaking-up.

Chas. M. Balluff is now at Oshkosh, Wis.

There have been a number of returning conventionites and others in town this week. J. A. Valentine and B. S. Gillis passed through last Friday. Mr. Valentine will proceed to the Pacific coast, where he will meet Mrs. Valentine and go to the Portland exposition. Other visitors were M. Stauch, foreman for J. F. Wilcox, Council Bluffs, and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Smith, of Ashland, Wis.; Mr. Karsten, of Chattanooga, returning from the Pacific coast; Wm. F. Gude, Washington, D. C., en route to Colorado. Mr. Gude received many congratulations on the success of the convention.

Weiland & Risch are cutting some very good Brides, stems two feet long. They say that Killarney has caught on, the retailers placing orders days in advance.

Miss Nell M. Sisler, of E. H. Hunt's, has returned from a two weeks' trip to the Yellowstone. J. Q. A. Turnbull, one of Hunt's road force, has been in court to recover a valuable collie recently stolen from him and was successful. Wm. Abrahamson, long in the store, is just back from his first trip for Hunt and brought some nice orders.

The Growers' Market has been nicely repapered and repainted and put in shape for the new season. John Kruchten has rented three stands at the market and will sell the cut of his father and others.

J. A. Budlong's Maids continue of exceptional color in spite of the several very hot days the past week.

On August 29 fire destroyed the building at South Chicago in which the store of M. Tredup was located.

The market is full of the Benthey aster.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Back in dear old St. Louis, after spending ten days in and around Washington, the convention city, we find all the cut flower trade in about the same condition as when we left it. Trade is very dull, with only funeral work to depend upon. In a visit to the wholesale houses we find that stock is still quite plentiful and of fair quality, with prices about as we left them. Among roses we find good lots of Kaiserin and Meteor, which sell well. Brides and Maids are yet small in flower and stem. These sell well to work up in funeral designs. There are fairly good Beauties, of which the medium length stems sell the best. Fancy long are always in demand. Carnations are very poor in all varieties and show the effects of the hot weather. The bulk of them are from the field.

Valley is very good, but slow in demand. Auratum lilies, tuberose stalks, hydrangeas and gladioli are still abundant; so are asters, but they sell better, especially the white, which clean up pretty well each day of late.

In speaking to some of our local growers they say that it will be but a short time when better quality of stock will be in the market. The young rose and carnation stock has made a fine growth and is promising well for first-class early blooms and everyone hopes that they will be in before the chrysanthemums, which always put other stock on the shelf for the time being. Chrysanthemum plants, too, are in the best of shape, and, from the looks of things, some fine blooms will be cut here this fall.

Various Notes.

Now that the twenty-first annual convention of the Society of American Florists has passed into history, and most of the local tradesmen have returned, I know that they are with me in expressing our thanks to the Washington brothers for the royal time we had while in their city, not forgetting the brothers from Baltimore and Philadelphia. The bowlers, too, are loud in their praise as to the bowling management. We did not do well as a team, but bagged the three highest games ever bowled in an S. A. F. tournament. The single high score of 240, by Deacon Harris, of Philadelphia, at St. Louis, in 1893, still stands as a record. Philadelphia first, Detroit last, but then Brothers Breitmeyer and Sullivan can content themselves by the old saying, "It's all right to be on top, but it's the bottom dollar that counts." Chicago's vest-pocket prize looked good to the boys, but then Brother Altick promises us fine alleys next year at Dayton, and we will all meet again for a good time, when we all hope for better luck.

The many St. Louis friends of President-elect Wm. F. Kasting are much pleased with his election to the highest honors that can be bestowed on any member of our society. "Billy," as he is better known, was formerly a resident of our city, back in the eighties, and we all know that he will make good anything he undertakes. Through his efforts we can safely look forward to a large attendance at Dayton next year. The bowlers, too, will be well looked after, as "Billy" is president of that body as well.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held on Thursday afternoon, September 14. This meeting will take place at J. H. Weber & Sons' nursery in Gardenville. All members, with their ladies, are invited to attend. Some very important matters will come up. One of the features will be the installation of the newly elected officers, for which elaborate preparations have been made. Short talks from the convention delegates will also be heard.

On Saturday a runaway horse dashed into the store of Mrs. M. M. Ayers, on Grand avenue, demolishing the plate glass windows and a number of valuable plants.

Charlie Kuehn, with Mrs. Kuehn and two children, is in Detroit, visiting the old folks.

J. W. Pilcher, of Pilcher & Burrows, florists' supply brokers, St. Louis, is spending a week in New York City in the interest of his firm. This was Mr. Pilcher's first convention away from home, and the good business licks he put in while at Washington make him say he will never miss one from now on.

Don't Hesitate

There is no reason why we should not have your business except that you hesitate to give us the first order.

We know that you will never hesitate after that. Make up your mind now. But try us on your next lot, large or small. The quality of goods that you get, the way your order is handled—will convince you that this is the right place.

The trustees who have charge of the fall flower show will meet this week at Weber's. A full attendance can now be had, as Messrs. Weber and Miller have returned from Europe. Mr. Weber reports that the hall is a very fine one, not so large, but beautifully decorated, and that they expect a great show and a successful one.

The big social bowling night to be given by the St. Louis Florists' Bowling Club in honor of Messrs. Weber and Miller, also the De Soto bowlers, will take place at the Palace alleys next Monday night. Invitations will be sent out this week. A large attendance is expected. A match of three games will be rolled with the De Soto boys, the same team that visited us early in the season.

Lewis R. Allen, who is proprietor of the Murphysboro Greenhouses, was in the city last week, making friendly calls on the trade. J. J. B.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Although August is generally a very dull month with the florists, this year seems to be an exception. There has been plenty of good funeral work, also a number of weddings, just enough to keep the ball rolling. With the exception of good white, asters are plentiful. There are lots of roses to be had, but mostly shorts. Beauties are simply fierce. La Detroit seems to be a fine summer rose and is in good demand. Carnations are still very poor, the best being worth only $1 per hundred. The best roses are selling for $5 per hundred, while asters are averaging $1. With the approach of Labor day, there is hope that the colored asters will be cleaned up, as a great many are generally used for buttonieres. Smilax seems rather scarce. Fancy ferns are to be had by the thousands. Let us hope for a greater supply next March and April than we had this year.

Convention Echoes.

With the exception of the two Sullivans, the Detroit delegation has returned. Wm. Dilger, Walter Taepke, Albert Bemb and B. Schroeter, Jr., returned Saturday. They are all highly elated with the two weeks' outing at Washington and thereabouts. A number of the boys put in a week in New York. Wm. Dilger took a run over to Boston.

Albert Bemb thinks they ought to have more whitewash on the glass over the beach at Atlantic City. The whole "bunch" has a bright red tan.

Anyone who thinks he missed any sight in Washington can get a photograph of the spot from B. Schroeter, Jr. He brought everything home in his camera.

Various Notes.

A visit to Frank Holznagle's place showed everything in the pink of condition as usual. Mr. Holznagle has just returned from a trip to Montreal, by way of the Thousand Islands.

Painters have been busy at Wm. Brown's store.

Mrs. J. F. Sullivan has been a very busy woman the past two weeks, with the two menfolks away.

B. Schroeter is having the steam heating service installed in his store and show house. This new heating system is meeting with great favor in Detroit.

The black aster bug, or beetle, is doing a great deal of damage in Detroit and vicinity, ruining thousands of asters.

Fred Pantke, of Grosse Pointe Farms, would like a suitable name for a new sport in the shape of a ten-pound girl. Pass the cigars, Fred, and everyone will make a suggestion.

John C. Smith, of Wyandotte, is putting up a handsome new greenhouse and store, the finest in the west, so he says.

Gus Knoch, of Woodmere, is also getting in line with a $6,000 dwelling and store, built mainly of cement blocks.

Work on the Breitmeyer building is progressing rapidly. Miami avenue has been widened five feet on each side and, after being repaved with asphalt, it will be an ideal florists' rendezvous.

Gladioli, asters and Hydrangea paniculata constitute the decorations in most of the store windows.

"Every bud is a flower" is the countersign at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange. This applies particularly to the La Detroit rose, which is in pink what Kaiserin is in white.

Chas. Warncke has added a fine touring car to his list of vehicles. He is at the "Michigan Cut" bright and early every morning.

P. F. Reuss, formerly at Schroeter's, has engaged in the cut fern business, locating in Johannesburg, Mich. Being in Mr. Schroeter's store over seven years, he ought to know good ferns when he sees them.

Carnation plants are looking fine in Detroit and vicinity.

Leopold Oesternei, of Siebrecht & Son, New York, reports business very good in Richmond, Va., Pittsburg and Buffalo. He is in Detroit at the present writing. Other visitors were Wm. Griesinger, Chicago; J. A. Valentine and B. S. Gillis, Denver; A. L. Barnett, New York. H. S.

IOWA FLORISTS MEET.

The Perry Florists' Association held a recent meeting at the home of W. T. Symonds, Decorah, Ia. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Kinsman, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Springer, P. Clawsen, N. B. Perry, Bernice Perry and M. H. Wetherbee. On motion, W. J. Springer was chosen temporary secretary. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Divine Providence has taken from us our sister and friend, Mrs. W. B. Perry; and

Whereas, We fully recognize her goodness of heart, worth, genial and happy disposition; therefore be it

Resolved, That while we deplore her loss, yet we bow to the Divine decree, and tender to the bereaved husband and family our sincerest sympathy in this their hour of affliction. It is further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be given to the family and spread upon the records of this society and published in the local paper.

On motion the society on invitation decided to hold its next meeting at the home of A. N. Kinsman, of Austin, Minn.

BROOKLYN, OHIO.—M. Bloy, formerly of Buffalo, but for the past two years with the Essex Greenhouse Co., North Olmsted, O., is now with the Ohio Floral Co.

CALDWELL, KAN.—Geo. H. Yantz is enlarging his plant to double its present size.

WE could not get along without the REVIEW; we find it the best advertising medium extant.—RAY H. PALMER, Randolph, N. Y.

The Market.

The cut flower market shows but little change this week. Sales are fair, at figures ranging lower than the listed prices. Pink and white roses of medium and lower grade are particularly hard to sell. Beauties are in fair demand and quite plentiful. Asters and gladioli form the bulk of the stock of showier flowers, with dahlias increasing and not yet very popular. Good lily of the valley is in demand, but there is a good deal of rather poor stock just now. Hydrangeas are very plentiful. There is a fair demand for the restricted quantity of "green" that is coming into the market.

Various Notes.

Through an unfortunate error in transmission the new "toneware" mentioned in this column last week was totally changed in appearance by the prefixing of an "s."

Charles H. Fox will move The Rosery, formerly located at Broad and Sansom streets, to Broad street, just below Walnut. Mr. Fox will have a new two-story building 23x41 feet designed in old English style. John N. Gill & Co. have commenced work on the new structure.

A ripple of excitement was created by the announcement last week, made exclusively in the Review, that W. E. McKissick would open a new commission house next Monday. A visit to his place of business found preparations actively going on under charge of Howard McKissick. The ice-box is already installed in what will be, when complete, a very light, cheerful place of business.

B. Starkey, bookkeeper for Pennock Bros., will be married next Tuesday. His many friends wish him happiness.

M. Rice & Co. were kept very busy waiting on convention visitors who did not get time to place their orders while in Washington. Some days they had all they could handle. They received a shipment of eighty cases of new goods of high class novelties from abroad last week, which they were busy opening.

Eugene Bernheimer has just returned from a week spent among the growers at Kennett and Oxford.

Edward Reid sailed on the Allegheny last Tuesday for Savannah, Ga.

M. F. La Roche, formerly wholesale commission florist and grower, is now in the automobile business.

Berger Bros. are installed in their roomy quarters at 1235 and 1237 Filbert street.

The Review is indebted to B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., for the following names of some of the visitors who were in Philadelphia: Mr. and Mrs. Kalisch, St. Louis; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Coles, Kokomo, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gear, Cincinnati; Mrs. D. A. Gorman, Williamsport, Pa.

It is said that should all the copies of the Blue Book be destroyed, Charles W. Kahlert could readily rewrite that volume.

The H. F. Michell Co. has been very busy, chiefly with French bulbs. Their orders for Paper Whites are exceptionally heavy. H. F. Michell has just returned from a brief respite at the shore.

John McIntyre has been rusticating at Newtown Square.

The victory of S. S. Skidelsky over twenty-two competitors in the prize essay on the Ideal Employer has proved a popular one.

Edward Reid was high score man with twenty-four out of a possible twenty-five clay pigeons in a shooting contest at Lansdale a few days ago.

George Anderson won a handsome trophy in the shooting contest at Washington.

The new stores of Frank Polites and R. A. Stewart are scheduled to open this week.

Clarence J. Watson and Edward J. Fancourt are actively caring for S. S. Pennock's interests during the latter's vacation. Phil.

BUFFALO.

Various Jottings.

The convention seems scarcely over, for the stragglers are still passing north. George Asmus is in town after a week at Saratoga. President-elect Kasting reached home Saturday. He spent a week at Atlantic City to cool off after his successful campaign. We have had a good many callers the past week. One of the Messrs. Schloss Bros., of New York; Mr. Henry, a Siebrecht representative; H. G. Berning, of St. Louis; and Fred Holznagle, of Detroit, returning from a trip through the Thousand Islands, which he describes as sublime.

The principal flowers of the day are gladioli and asters, but the new crop of carnations and roses is seen in small quantities. Maids, MacArthur and Morgan of fair quality are coming from Corfu, but the principal demand is for moderate-priced Beauties.

Wm. F. Holmes has resigned his position with Miss R. Rebstock and accepted a position in the store of the William Donaldson Co., of Minneapolis.

There has been, after all, considerable building in this locality. The Werick Bros., of Pine Ridge, have had the King Construction Co. erect six carnation houses, each 26x125. C. F. Christenson has finished two rose houses, 20x150. W. J. Palmer has added to his already big place a house 40x240 and Byrne Bros. have erected two more fine houses adapted to carnations, so there is faith generally that there is room for more.

Charles Sandiford has returned from his short trip to England and now is likely to begin the erection of a block of houses for the pleasure of his liberal employer, J. J. Albright.

At Philadelphia.

On a visit to Philadelphia on Saturday after the convention, we visited some old friends. We called on Edwin Lonsdale, at Girard College, but missed Edwin. We saw what an immense institution this is and what an extent of ground the college covers, noticed the excellent condition of the grounds and some fine flower gardening and particularly grand croton beds. That we cannot do in the north.

It was a great pleasure to call at Forty-ninth and Market, where we found the veteran, Mr. Craig, in his shirtsleeves and hustling. Now, it would take too long to mention all the well-grown and useful crops to be seen there. Principal among them we noticed thousands of wonderful cyclamens in 6-inch pots, houses of Begonia Lorraine of all sizes, houses of gardenias planted out for cutting, several houses of Nephrolepis Scottii, a house of well colored Dracæna terminalis, the usual wonderful lot of crotons and a house of Ficus pandurata. This is a very striking plant with leaves of sheet iron and there is many a place where it will be wanted. Outside in frames nothing struck me as more well done than a big lot of Bougainvillea Sanderiana, dwarf and compact and as round as a parasol. There were several thousand hydrangeas in 6-inch pots with strong growths. Of course there is the usual stock of kentias and arecas, but the whole place has a business look which shows that some old-time vim has been injected into the work and I was rejoiced to see it. The only trouble was, I wished all my boys could see these houses and their contents. W. S.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

TIMOTHY seed is around $1.65 at Toledo.

YELLOW fever has taken its toll of the seedsmen, the death of A. R. Kerlac, of New Orleans, having been chronicled in last week's REVIEW.

JOHN M. CLARK, of the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, is in Michigan on his annual tour of inspection of peas, beans, trout and muskallonge.

OTTO H. R. WIESE, manager of David Sachs, Quedlinburg, Germany, is making his annual tour of the wholesale trade in America. He has been through the northern section and was at Chicago August 28. He reports trade about as usual.

THE Cleveland Seed Co., S. M. Pease president, has removed its main office from Rochester to Avon, N. Y., where they have just completed a four-story warehouse for beans. The pea growing station at Picton, Ont., will be maintained.

THE W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, proposes, in addition to pushing the bulb, florists' seeds, greens and catalogue departments of the business, to extend the wholesale end acquired from the Goodwin-Harries Co., of which A. H. Goodwin will continue in charge. The capital of the corporation is $100,000.

EUROPEAN SEED CROPS.

The Horticultural Trade Journal, London, has prepared the following summary of seed crops in Europe:

Kales and Savoys.—Seeds of all the leading varieties of kales will, it is expected, be at their usual prices.

Thousand-headed Kale.—The acreage for seed is small and therefore prices are expected to rule considerably higher than usual. Green Curled savoy is a short crop, but other varieties will be of the usual prices.

Radish.—Crops are found to vary considerably in the principal producing districts in some parts of Germany, but in the Anjou district the crops up to the present are disappointing. English crops are badly in want of rain.

Carrot.—Crops said to be very short in Germany, but there are very good yields in the south of France; they are fair in the Anjou, and have improved as we get nearer Paris. White Belgian carrot is likely to be higher in price.

Cress.—There is a very fair promise of a crop, and there should be a good sample if the present fine weather is not too greatly interfered with by rain.

Lettuce.—There is the promise of a plentiful supply of seeds of all the leading varieties.

Parsley.—Home crops promise a good yield, but there is not likely to be so much as usual sent in from the continent.

French Beans.—It has been noted that the crops about the country are blooming freely, and there is a promise of a good yield. In Germany, the acreage, usually so plentiful, is a very small one. Dwarf varieties promise very well and the yield should be such as to bring the crop into the market at reasonable prices.

Turnips.—All varieties promise a plentiful harvest, except in Germany. Yellow and white fleshed turnips are very good in this country and seeds are on the point of harvesting in good condition.

Swede Turnips.—These are very poor crops generally, many crops are badly affected with the canker, and the better sorts should be higher in price. Bronze-top varieties also are more scarce than usual, but of the common kinds there is still a considerable reserve of 1903 crop.

Mangels.—Mangels are already advancing in prices, although at the moment crops promise fairly well. Warehouses are empty of seeds and the acreage growing for seed is much smaller than usual, so that there is every reason to believe that we shall see considerably higher rates.

Rape will be scarce, as the acreage is short in England, and the Dutch farmers find more profit in the culture of sugar beet. The market for rape will present interesting features later on.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

Market conditions were somewhat light the past week and very little doing among the retailers. Growers are busy, however, planting stock and doing the usual summer repairing. What increase there was in glass will be principally devoted to carnations and there will be quite an increase benched this season over last. There will be about the same number of mums and roses, with a slight increase in lilies and green goods. Some growers are giving more spaee and attention to plants, which have found a good market the past year.

Various Notes.

The C. C. Pollworth Co.'s new addition is completed and planting is well under way.

Wm. Edlefsen is busy looking after the erection of several houses.

John Howard and Chas. Burmeister have each added one house for carnations.

Jos. E. Pollworth and wife have returned from a three weeks' trip through The Dells and northern Wisconsin resorts.

Otto Speidel, of Oconomowoc, passed through the city on his way to Manitowoc to attend the funeral of his mother-in-law.

Miles Meidam, of Appleton, paid us a short visit last week, as did E. C. Amling, of Chicago.

Members of the craft returning from Washington praise the hospitality of the Washington club and the business-like convention. Congratulations go to Kasting. INCOG.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

I recently made a visit to the Anchorage Rose Co. This establishment is twelve miles from the city and lies between Anchorage and Middletown. It consists of five large greenhouses, or 52,000 square feet of glass. This company has been incorporated with capital stock of $50,000. Chas. Rayner is president. I had the pleasure of meeting the proprietors and received the glad hand of welcome. Mr. Rayner showed me through the different houses and I found everything in fine shape. One house of Golden Gate was in fine condition. A house of Bridesmaid was in its prime, also a house of Bride and Ivory looked very promising. Chrysanthemums were to be seen here. One especially, a white called Cremo, the firm thinks a great deal of. They are putting in a new boiler and when completed the heating apparatus will be in fine shape.

Jacob Schulz, A. Baumer and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Kunzman have returned from Washington and speak very highly of the convention.

Business is at a standstill. Lots of asters are coming in and are of fine quality. HY LICHTEFELD.

BOILER AND RADIATION.

We have a greenhouse 100 feet long, twenty feet wide, three-quarter span, eleven feet to the ridge, seven feet to the rear plate and three and a half feet in front, running east and west. We have a cast-iron boiler of eight sections. The grate is 19x32 inches. Would this boiler be large enough to heat the house at 55 degrees in zero weather? How many 2-inch flows and how many 1¼-inch returns will be required to heat with steam? The office is on the east and breaks the east winds. A. W. V.

I regret to say that it is impossible to more than guess at the size and capacity of your boiler from the figures given. The grate surface, which is a little less than five feet, may bear a ratio of one to forty or one to eighty, depending upon the designer. It is safe to calculate on a basis of one to forty, without doubt, in which case the boiler would have a capacity to care for 1,600 square feet of radiation. To maintain a temperature of 55 degrees in this house with hot water at 180 degrees will require 800 feet of radiation, and to maintain the same temperature with steam at five pounds pressure will require about 570 square feet of radiation. To provide the necessary heat with steam a 2-inch riser under the ridge, returning by twelve 1¼-inch pipes along the side walls or under the benches will suffice. If hot water is used a larger flow and more returns will be necessary. For hot water the flow should be 2½-inches and there should be at least seventeen 1¼-inch returns.

Larwill, Ind.—F. A. Knull has erected a 100-barrel tank this season and plans to put up a house 20x70 before fall. Trade has been very good all summer. He has an acre of asters, mostly Benthey's variety.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE business done with hardy phloxes increases every year.

The peony business is on the boom again now that planting time is here.

THE white ash, owing to its thrifty and symmetrical growth, has become a very popular tree for street planting.

THERE was a time when nurseries west of the Mississippi had no use for ornamentals, but that time has passed.

THE nurseries which have stocks of hardy perennials report that the summer show is bearing fruit in many orders for stock.

THE western growers of apple seedlings have largely employed new land this season and report stock very free from disease.

EASTERN nurserymen report increased call for evergreens for fall planting. Many small evergreens are being used for bedding purposes.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Among the visitors here are Irving C. Spaulding and George Reilly, of the Spaulding Nursery and Orchard Co., Spaulding, Ill.

MASON CITY, IA., is rejoicing that the St. Ansgar Nursery, St. Ansgar, Ia., has bought a 200-acre tract on the edge of Mason City and will shortly remove there.

M. J. HENRY, Vancouver, B. C., has finished budding nursery stock and says the supply in his territory is steadily increasing, but not faster than the demand.

THE Hyde Park nursery, Chicago, has been incorporated, capital, $10,000, to raise trees, plants and flowers; incorporators, George W. Ross, David H. Stapp and Frank M. Burwash.

A PEONY which will be heard from in time is Mme. Forel, but import orders for it bring all sorts of light pinks. One importer of Mme. Bollet received part true Mme. Forel. It is not unlike Louise d'Estrees but larger and opens more like a rose.

THE WEEPING LILAC.

That small weeping trees are very popular may be judged from the fact of the numbers of such sold each season. Among the most popular are the weeping flowering cherries, weeping dogwood, weeping mulberry and weeping willows. The weeping lilac deserves as much, or more, recognition as any of the preceding. It is a native of China, growing around Pekin, from which its name, Pekinensis pendula, is obtained.

When first exhibited at the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's exhibition, Samuel Parsons, a great authority on such matters, said it was "the most beautiful of all our small weeping trees." Jackson Dawson, a name as familiar as "household words" to the gardening world of the United States, wrote: "I consider the new weeping lilac a very valuable addition to our ornamental trees, unique in its appearance, perfectly hardy and most desirable."

Syringa Pekinensis Pendula.

There are places on a lawn, or large place, at the junction of walks, etc., where no other one plant or shrub would be so appropriate and in keeping with the place as a fine, desirable weeping variety, especially if the weeper produces flowers also, as does the weeping lilac, which, when planted in the right spot, is charming in the extreme. Its light, pendulous branches are gracefully attractive and it is most beautiful, having a style all its own, and when in flower its intense honeyed sweetness is felt for quite a distance. When first introduced the price of plants was $5.00 each, a price none too high for so valuable a variety. Its propagation is somewhat slow, as it takes from four and five years to produce good plants fit for the market. The photograph reproduced was taken from a specimen on our grounds, and it shows what an elegant weeping flowering plant we have in this variety. JOHN CHARLTON.

Variegated Lawson Carnation

A PHENOMENAL VARIETY.

This beautiful carnation, which we introduced last spring, we are sure will prove not only the best variegated carnation ever sent out, but one of the most popular and profitable carnations in any color that have ever been introduced. The popular conception of a variegated flower ordinarily is that it is not so desirable as a solid color, but Variegated Lawson has proved an exception to the rule, on account of its exceeding beauty and delicacy. If our own retail sales are any index of the popularity of a variety, then Variegated Lawson is bound to be a winner, as the flowers of this sold more readily than those of any other variety.

Aside from its inherent value it will also be sought for on account of the sensation which it created last season in the newspapers, its merits having been heralded widely in the daily press all over the country. The variegation is very beautiful—delicate carmine pencilings on ivory-white ground. It has every good quality—beautiful flower, fine stiff stem, and is exceedingly productive. W. N. Craig, who is an authority on everything pertaining to horticulture, says that he knows that it will outbloom that popular variety, Mrs. M. A. Patten, three to one. The variegation is very similar, but Variegated Lawson has a much better stem and is much more productive. It has the Lawson habit and stem.

White Lawson, which we introduced last year, has proved to be the best white carnation ever put on the market, and we are satisfied that Variegated Lawson will be grown just as largely. Those who are growing moderate quantities of carnations and are obliged to grow several varieties in a house, will find it decidedly to their advantage to plant the different Lawson sports, as they all require the same treatment, and, consequently, will give the best results. A great many carnations are short-season varieties, but Variegated Lawson, like the rest of the Lawson type, has a long season, as the flowers do well during the late spring and summer, when many varieties cease to be at their best.

PACIFIC COAST.

EVERGREEN HEDGES.

During the month of September is the best time of the year to trim evergreen hedges; that is, such varieties as are pruned only once during the season. With trees that are cut twice a year the month of May is about the proper time for the first trimming. It is surprising to what a low height hedges can be kept if properly pruned. The writer has a hedge of Monterey cypress, a tree much used on this coast for hedges, that has been kept down to a height of five feet for over forty years, and has not been allowed to grow any wider than thirty inches. This is due entirely to the careful manner of trimming.

It is not advisable to cut cypress in the middle of winter, for when the weather is severe the trees make little or no growth and it is possible for them to die back a considerable distance after cutting, whereas when trimmed in their growing season they do not seem to notice the set-back. This is just the reverse from deciduous hedges, but few of which are seen here.

With the cypress, as with all other evergreen hedge trees, the cutting never wants to be neglected for a season. Many a beautiful hedge has been ruined by allowing the lateral branches to spread and grow too much, so that when pruned back to the proper distance, bare, leafless branches are the result and it is often impossible to get a new growth, particularly on the lower portion of the trees. Occasionally the trees die out in spots and the symmetry is often irreparably ruined.

With pittosporums we use tenuifolia and Eugenoides, both of which are valuable trees for this purpose. They should be trimmed twice a year and they can be kept at any desired height by the same process. Laurus Tinus is also much used and should be pruned the same. California privet is not planted as much here as in the east and will stand trimming three times a year at least. Tree box should not be cut oftener than once a year and the same with diosma, both of which are very desirable for low-growing hedges. G.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Seattle Florists' Association held August 22 the members in favor of having a stock company run the chrysanthemum show were in heavy majority. In a twinkling $400 worth of shares were sold. Blocks of five shares, the limit for one person, were quickly taken by the members with the long purses and the others got in line when single shares were offered at $5. One had the temerity to ask if there were any half shares. The supercilious look he got from the chairman froze him stiff.

J. J. Bonnell read his long looked for paper on the growing of outdoor roses in summer for market. It was an excellent treatise and full of new ideas.

Various Notes.

C. J. Hurtt, who has had charge of Capt. Buckley's place at Ballard, has gone back to Denver, to resume his business there.

James Miller, lately with the Ledges Floral Co., at Bellevue, has also gone back to Denver on account of his health.

The Seattle Floral Co. is getting the ground in shape for a house 20x90 feet.

D. M. Kersey, of Bellingham, was visiting the florists in the city this week.

A pottery for the manufacture of florists' flower pots is in operation in Everett, Wash. Samples were shown at the last meeting of the club and were declared up to the standard of eastern pots. A. B.

VICTORIA, B. C.

W. Gage, who has been for some time with L. Russell, of the Jubilee Greenhouses, has entered into partnership with A. Ohlsen of the Oakland Nurseries. They should prove a good team.

J. Layritz reports a very heavy demand for fruit trees for next season's planting. The possibilities of this country for fruit growers are just beginning to be understood.

The following conversation, overheard in front of a florist's store in Victoria, will illustrate the state of summer trade here. First lady tourist: "What lovely flowers! Let us go in and buy some." Second ditto, who has been here a few days: "Don't be foolish. If you want flowers all you need do is to look over anyone's fence and they will give you all you want."

This week we celebrated our fourth annual flower show. It was by far the best ever held here and proved a great success financially also. L. Russell took the prize for group covering 100 square feet. Flewin's Gardens showed herbaceous perennials in good form. Among them were delphiniums with flowers two to two and a half inches across. Twenty-three dinner table decorations were a drawing card and, needless to say, the judges retired early before the storm broke. Among amateur exhibits Mrs. Henry Croft staged twelve ferns that would have been hard to beat in any quarter of the globe. F. B. Pemberton put up a wonderful vase of Lilium auratum platyphyllum Wittei. Some day I will send you descriptions of some of this gentleman's lilies. In his garden I have seen Humboldtii with over sixty flowers on a stem; Washingtonianum and rubescens ten feet high; auratums, ten to twelve feet, by the score, with fifty to 100 flowers. I only know one man who does lilies better and that is the famous English lily fancier, G. F. Wilson.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business continues very quiet, with quantities of stock on hand. Asters are now at their height and can be had at almost any price. Lilium album and rubrum are being received in large quantities and they sell very well. Valley is scarce, also Lilium longiflorum. Roses are more plentiful than for the past week but the quality throughout is poor. Carnations are not in excess of the demand but they are generally off-color and weak-stemmed. Smilax is more plentiful. Considerable golden-rod is handled by the retailers. It makes a very effective decoration.

Various Notes.

Several shipments of large kentias in excellent order have been received by local florists from Chas. D. Ball, of Philadelphia.

Wm. Simmons, of Elmhurst, will plant largely of Bridesmaid for the coming season.

John M. Holland, manager of Gill's Floral Depot, Oakland, is making a tour of the southern counties.

Miss Rose Mann, for many years associated with A. Mann, Jr., has opened a floral establishment at 1326 Polk street.

James Skinner has 100 fine specimen Laurus nobilis on exhibition at Sutter and Jones streets.

The rather unique idea of a bank and florist's establishment in the same store can be seen at Chas. Stappenback's, on Polk street. The Citizens' National Bank, pending the completion of their building next door, have rented half his store.

It is reported that another Japanese company is negotiating for ten acres of land at Elmhurst, with the intention of going into the wholesale florists' business.

Mrs. E. Cottle, formerly of Oakland, has gone to Gold Field, Nevada, to engage in the retail florists' business.

W. J. Ford has been appointed superintendent of Holy Cross cemetery. There were about 500 applications for the position.

Following the fashion of the better class of stores, the Misses Worn have fitted up and moved to the corner of Stockton and Post streets, three blocks from their old location.

T. Domoto is on a business trip to Los Angeles and vicinity.

The range of houses recently built by John Cooke, of Berkeley, are ready for planting.

D. Raymond, of the Garden City Pottery Co., reports a heavy month's business in flower pots.

J. L. Thomas is on a trip to Portland.

J. D. Pilkington is in San Francisco on a flying trip from Portland. Mr. Pilkington is shipping large quantities of bay trees in boxes to California. G.

Other Notes.

Felix Gonzalez, 600 Crescent avenue, has at the present 25,000 square feet of glass and intends to build another house 18x110.

J. T. Shepherd, 563 Thirteenth street, Oakland, has gone into insolvency.

Alex. Mann, Jr., 1441 Polk street, now has an up-to-date new store front, fifteen feet of plate glass, making one of the handsomest stores on Polk street.

Two of our leading florists, Antoine Figone and Chas. Cohen, have formed a partnership and will open a store at 248 Sutter street on September 1.

Cleis & Jacobsen, 1180 McAllister street, have moved to a large store at 942 Fillmore street. In connection with their cut flower business they carry a full line of seeds, trees and plants.

There are about fourteen Japanese growers of cut flowers in and around San Francisco, three in Berkeley, eight in East Oakland, Elmhurst and Fitchburg, and three in San Francisco. The largest of these growers is Domoto Bros., who have two nurseries, one in East Oakland, of 55,000 square feet of glass, and another at Fitchburg, of 70,000 feet of glass. They are now building four more houses 25x300. They carry the largest stock of Japanese plants and palms on the coast. There are six Japanese engaged in the retail florists' business in the city at the present time.

The Haight Street Florist, formerly of 316 Fillmore street, has moved to a large and handsome store at the corner of Fillmore and Haight streets. M. A.

ROCKFORD, ILL.—The park committee of the city council last spring gave H. W. Buckbee an order for planting at the Fairgrounds park. When a bill for $257 was received they held up their hands in horror. Mr. Buckbee declares the charge is moderate for the job.

EASTON, PA.—When President Roosevelt passed through here recently the Fraternal Order of Eagles presented him with a very fine basket of roses, carnations and asters. It was nearly five feet high and more than three feet through, the work of Paul Kaffke, of A. F. Raub & Co.

CAMDEN, N. J.—A meeting of the creditors of the Peacock Co. has been called by the trustees for August 31.

MANSFIELD, PA.—Mrs. Robert Crossley is adding another house 18x115. Business has been quiet during the summer.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—M. J. Henry and a party of friends are "tenting on the old camp ground," the banks of the Lillooet river, one of the finest trout streams in the world.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

The weather is most delightful, leaving nothing to be wished for in that line, but trade remains in that dormant August state we all know well. Someone calls it the "August bridge," but we are hoping now that it will not run into September. The only cry seems to be for white asters; pink asters are to be had by the thousands, but white are very scarce.

Various Notes.

The stragglers from the S. A. F. convention are all home and report having had a good time, with nothing but kind words for the Washington and Baltimore people.

ABUNDANCE

The Most Wonderfully Prolific Carnation Ever in Existence.

It hasn't any prizes, certificates of merit, medals or anything of that sort to recommend it; but it has nine years of wonderfully prolific life to its credit, which the certificated, bemedaled varieties have not when first offered to the trade. I have grown it exclusively ever since I got stock enough to fill my house with, and intend to grow no other variety while "Abundance" pays me so well. It is as strong, healthy and prolific today, as in the first years of its life. The color is a pure white, very fragrant, of medium size, 2½ inches in early fall and winter, reaching 3 inches in late winter and spring, with a stem 14 inches in fall, stretching to 2½ and 3 feet in winter and spring. It has the slim, wiry growth of Lizzy McGowan of which it is a seedling crossed by Wm. Scott, but it surpasses its parents by far in blooming quality, in fact there isn't anything with which to compare in that respect It is an exceedingly free, rapid and healthy grower. Has never been subject to stem rot or any other disease, can be transplanted at any time or in any way without the care and fuss which have to be bestowed on the heavy, sappy varieties, as it takes hold of the new situation at once and never turns a leaf yellow. Is an absolute non-cropper: but is literally loaded with shoots in all stages of development, from the time they are benched until thrown out in summer. It is not an untried variety that is barely brought into existance until it is put on the market only to disappear in a year or two; but it is one by which I have earned my living for years and is likely to do for some years to come, it is a carnation for the bread-winner and not for the fancier.

Price, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000. Cash with order, please.

Cuttings delivered in strict rotation as soon as rooted, and nothing but first-class stock sent out as I have an abundance of stock to produce from.

THE MARKET FOR GLASS.

The window glass market continues firm. Stocks in jobbers' hands have become very much depleted, and it is difficult to procure a good assortment. Glazing sizes, twenty-four, twenty-six and twenty-eight inches, are particularly scarce and sometimes command a premium, though prices are still quoted at 90@90 and 10 on the first two brackets single and on double B, at 89 per cent on all other sizes of B, and 88 per cent on all glass off the October, 1903, list. In the west demand is in excess of the supply and prices there rule at a premium of ten to fifteen per cent above these figures.

The wage scale for next season has not yet been altogether settled. As manufacturers have little or no stock available, it looks as if the situation may become acute if arrangements are not soon made to resume work at the factories.

A meeting of the Eastern Window Glass Jobbers' Association will be held at Atlantic City September 1 to discuss the general situation.

The Market.

There were some nice funeral orders in during the past week, but trade was about as quiet as we ever see it in the wholesale line. The supply of stock, such as it was, was large enough but good stock was scarce. Semple's asters are coming in and some very good stock is to be had, but there is a big percentage that is bad. The best which comes from the north, are not in yet but will be due shortly.

Various Notes.

Julius Baer, with his wife and son, has been touring the lakes. While at Niagara Falls they were in a trolley car smash-up, but luckily all escaped with a few bruises.

Nick Weber is home from a trip north and reports business fair.

Chas. Jones has been putting his Walnut Hills store in shape to be ready for the fall trade, which will begin to open up soon.

Miss Cronin, of Covington, has everything in good shape in her new store and is looking forward to a prosperous season.

R. D. Ruttle, of Covington, reports a fine trade, mostly funeral work.

H. D. Edwards is still on the sick list, but is some better. His business is being run by his wife, who is managing it very successfully and reports the summer trade as having been quite up to the average.

E. G. Gillett and family have returned from a two weeks' trip through the east. They report having had a fine time, especially at Washington during the convention.

Harry Papworth, of New Orleans, called on his way home from the convention. Fred C. Weber, St. Louis, was also a caller. He was on his way to Boston and Atlantic City.

The next meeting of the Florists' Society will be held in the club rooms on Saturday evening, September 9. Many interesting subjects will be discussed.

SCORES OF FLORISTS USE

Hammond's Grape Dust

CHRYSANTHEMUMS AND CARNATIONS

This comes from WALLACE GOMERSALL, superintendent of the famous "Wodenethe," owned and finely maintained by Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.:

"For chrysanthemums we use GRAPE DUST with the best results by freely dusting with it until the delicate blooms come, then we are a bit shy of it, to prevent any staining of the petals, but during the green state, even in bad weather, there is no trace of fungus, and we keep free of the spot. I have recommended it to many gardeners, and so far my acquaintances have found it very valuable. In common with many gardeners and florists, I have found it of great value in checking the rust on carnations. It is not expensive to use, for by using in air bellows it diffuses itself everywhere, and is, in my judgment, a valuable every day article. For roses it is of exceptional benefit against mildew."

How to Use Grape Dust for Violets, etc., in the Greenhouse.

Fill the house with dust as soon as the plants are set, and let it settle over the plants, or put one pound to a pail of water and spray it finely over everything, plants, ground, benches, etc. Spores are likely to settle anywhere about and prevention is the best remedy. Its fineness, its reliability, and its great diffusiveness combine to make GRAPE DUST take the highest rank as a popular and economical fungicide.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

Club Organized.

On August 10 a few of the local florists, including Mr. Gladiolus Cushman, of our suburb, Sylvania, met in answer to a call sent out by George Bayer in order to establish a local florists' club. The meeting was held at Chas. Schramm's greenhouse office, and resulted in the election of George Bayer as temporary president and S. M. Peck as temporary secretary. A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws. Adjournment was then taken to August 24, at which meeting Mr. Bayer was made president, Mr. Cushman vice-president and Mr. Peck secretary and treasurer for a term of one year. The meeting was attended by fifteen, and as about ten more are willing to join, we can figure on a good membership. Chas. Schramm is a committee of one on permanent headquarters, where meetings will be held once a month hereafter. Everybody is enthusiastic and puts his shoulder to the wheel.

After the business part of the last meeting we had a general discussion on aster bugs, but as nobody knew any remedy outside of catching them by hand and dropping a brick on them, the matter hangs fire.

Various Notes.

The Washington crowd is back, sound and well, except Mr. Mills, who got into a wreck on the home trip and lost a lot of teeth and had a number of stitches taken in his face. He seems to be doing well, according to the last report. Next year's meeting of the S. A. F. will be well attended from here.

Our president, George Bayer, was much surprised that a certain coat promised by the Detroit boys at their recent visit to Toledo, and to be worn by the president of the Toledo Florists' Club, had not made its appearance. Said coat is composed of a certain number of tissues of fabric, the composition of which can only be ascertained from Wm. Dilger and about a dozen of other Detroiters, and E. Suder and E. Kuhnke, of Toledo.

Krueger Bros. are putting up four houses for carnations.

Al. Imoberstag is putting up some nice houses near Forest cemetery.
